ARMY OF FEDERAL AGENTS BALKED BY DEATH THREAT; STANDING BY UNTIL KIDNAPERS RETURN RICH YOUTH

TARVER RAPS U. S. FOR DISAPPROVING BIG ROAD PROJECT

U. S. HIGHWAY HEAD IS HIT AS 'USURPER'

Reported Disapproval Had Been Blamed Earlier on Alleged Inefficiency in Georgia.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—(AP)—Disapproval by the Bureau of Roads of a $1,500,000 Georgia road project was reported today by Representative Tarver, democrat, Georgia, with a statement the action resulted from "refusal of the state highway board to initiate the Balls Ferry project."

Tarver described as an "afterthought" the objection he said was given by Thomas H. MacDonald, bureau chief, as the basis for the rejection—that the state highway engineering organization was inadequate.

Rapping MacDonald for his position, the Georgian declared:

"His attempts to force, himself, the initiation of projects, when that power is reserved by law to the state highway board, is a clear usurpation of authority and should not be tolerated."

The reported disapproval of the project outlay was in line with information given this week in a well-informed quarter that the bureau would approve no more projects for Georgia until greater efficiency was developed in the highway department engineering force, where it was claimed competent engineers had resigned because of repeated wage slashes.

End of U. S. Aid Looms.

Should the bureau not recede from this stand, a possibility was seen that federal aid through the state highway department might be shut off, clogging the flow of approximately $17,000,000 which Georgia, under normal conditions, would receive from the government in the next two years for highways, matches state funds, and for grade crossing elimination.

In regard to the reported wage slashes, a member of the Georgia delegation on Capitol Hill who declined to have his name used, said he had received several letters from state highway engineers recently relating they were "unable to live on" their pay and asking assistance in getting federal jobs.

Tarver said MacDonald insisted that "approximately one-fifth of the total secondary road aid funds available for Georgia under the 1934 appropriation shall be used to construct this expensive bridge," which he cited could cost $280,000. The bridge would be located on Ocmulgee river on the highway between Macon and Waynesboro.

Bureau, Vinson Hit.

Governor Talmadge in a statement Thursday accused both the roads bureau and Representative Vinson, of Georgia, from the district where the bridge was planned, with trying to

Prominent Forester Dies

Bonnell Stone, well-known Georgian, who died Saturday at Oxford.

BONNELL STONE, 48, PASSES AT OXFORD

Founder and Secretary of State Forest Body Dies After Long Illness.

OXFORD, Ga., May 25.—Bonnell Stone, 48, secretary of the Georgia Forestry Association and recognized as the "father of" forestry in Georgia," and ex-mayor of Oxford, died at his home here this afternoon after a long illness.

He is survived by his wife, one daughter, Mrs. Paul Mayo, of Sandersville; two sons, Harold and Edward Stone; his mother, Mrs. Harris H. Stone; two sisters, Miss Emma Stone and Mrs. V. Y. C. Eady; one brother, Howard Stone, all of Oxford.

Funeral Rites Today.

Funeral services will be held Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock at Allen Memorial Methodist church here, with the pastor, Rev. N. P. Manning, and Bishop Warren Candler officiating.

Officials of the Georgia Forestry Association and others close to Mr. Stone in forestry work will act as pallbearers and as honorary escort.

Mr. Stone was born at Oxford, the son of the late Professor H. H. Stone, long connected with Emory College here. Both of his grandfathers were also connected with Emory.

He graduated at Emory College here and later studied forestry at the University of Georgia. For 13 years he was forester for the Pheister-Vogel Company, large timber owners in Union and Towns counties, his headquarters being at Blairsville. During his residence there he represented Union county in the state legislature. While a citizen of Blairsville, he, with the late James A. Hollomon, of The Atlanta Constitution, conceived the plan to build a highway through northeast Georgia and as a result of their efforts the present Neel's Gap highway was graded and paved. Mr. Stone was directly responsible for the Vogel company donating to the state of Georgia 800 acres of land for a state park at Neel's Gap, now known as Vogel Park.

Realizing the value of timber, he was one of the founders and organizers of the present Georgia Forestry Association and served as its secretary since its organization 13 years ago. He was regarded as one of the best posted men on forestry in Georgia and the south.

At the session of the forestry body held in Macon last week, in his absence, it was decided to erect a tab-

ALL SIGNS SHOW ROOSEVELT TO RUN ON MIDDLE PLANK

WASHINGTON, May 25.—(AP)—Developing New Deal strategy has convinced much of political Washington an objective is to have the Roosevelt-Garner ticket in 1936 identified as "middle-of-the-road."

Recent events have fortified this conclusion. Administration rebuffs this week to organized labor in the work-relief wage scales, to the inflationist left in veto of the bonus bill, and then to the industrial right in indorsement of the Vagner labor bill "in principle," conformed too well to the growing pattern to be considered insignificant.

Looming Possibilities.

That many happenings could change the prospect is conceded. Economic conditions as of convention and campaign time will be a foremost factor. Among other possibilities, three stand out:

1—Success for republican efforts to unify the party into the spirited organism it was in the twenties.

2—Attainment of a common ground by forces that object the New Deal is not sufficiently "liberal," such as the Wisconsin progressives, northwestern farmer-laborites, and supporters of Senator Long, Father Coughlin, Upton Sinclair, Dr. F. E. Townsend and Milo Reno, and

3. A formidable bi-partisan conservative alignment.

Republicans Split.

As to the first, difficulties confronting the G. O. P. are plain. With the Springfield (Ill.) "grass roots" rally scheduled two weeks from Monday, differences over whether potential presidential candidacies should figure or whether republicans who have aided the New Deal should be admitted, have cropped up. With the AAA wheat referendum taken today, division over this important farm policy is apparent in republican strongholds.

There also is conflict over whether the G. O. P. should appeal primarily for conservative support. Chairman Henry P. Fletcher reported today, "many of us feel conservatism should be shaded a bit;" but leaders with whom he has conferred felt "the party's fundamental appeal should be to the conservative element."

Typifying the view of various republican independent colleagues, Senator Nye, North Dakota, took the position a conservative attempt to dominate the convention would rouse "rebellion."

Third Party Remote.

For all the talk about third party possibilities, the evident impression at the capitol is that no such movement—as the situation now stands—will become a decisive national factor in 1936.

Governor La Follette told this week's progressive celebration in Wisconsin a "cornerstone" for realignment had been laid, but it would take time. Upton Sinclair in California talked of "capturing" the democratic party for his EPIC "production for use" plan, rather than setting out independently in view of his dissatisfaction with the New Deal. In the end, he said, EPIC forces probably will support Roosevelt.

Al Smith Considered.

Discussion of a conservative republican-democratic coalition next year, possibly behind Alfred E. Smith or another prominent anti-New Deal democrat, has been in the open too short a time to be fully measured. Suffice to say, that some Roosevelt leaders don't dismiss it lightly.

That should not be taken to mean that they are politically inactive, however. The pros and cons of the bonus veto were weighed carefully before Mr. Roosevelt took the stand he did. The fact the parties in congress were divided on the issue was noted. The conclusion was that this veto, at least, would have no ultimate effect next year.

Ingalls Forced Down In Cross Country Dash

INDIANAPOLIS, May 25.—(AP)—A leaking oil line forced Laura Ingalls to land at the municipal airport here this evening on her attempt to set a non-stop trancontinental flight from California to New York.

She said she made the trip from Los Angeles to Wichita, Kansas, in five hours and 45 minutes and first began to notice trouble after passing over Kansas City.

"I had been making between 220 and 235 miles an hour to Wichita," she said.

"When I came to Indianapolis I thought it would be very foolish to try and continue in the face of the low oil pressure."

Miss Ingalls said she will make another attempt.

DR. AMOS D. OLDS DIES OF INJURIES

Prominent College Park Physician Victim of Train-Auto Crash.

Struck by a train he failed to see, Dr. Amos D. Olds, prominent College Park physician, was fatally injured yesterday.

The doctor's car was demolished when it was struck by a freight train at the Jefferson street crossing in East Point at 9:30 o'clock yesterday morning.

He was taken to the Crawford W. Long hospital, where he died at 1:35 o'clock yesterday afternoon of head injuries.

Police reported that Dr. Olds, returning from a professional call, apparently did not see the train and drove onto the tracks directly in the path of the southbound A. & W. P. locomotive. W. T. Stewart, crossing watchman, said Dr. Olds did nto heed the stop sign he held up.

The College Park physician was the father of Dr. Bomar A. Olds, widely known ear, nose and throat specialist, of Atlanta. He is also survived by his wife, two daughters, Miss Eloise Olds and Mrs. Herbert Jacobs; four sisters, Mrs. Ludie Olds Turner, Mrs. Jack Majors, Mrs. Charles Vinson, and Mrs. Elizabeth Freeman, and two brothers, William and Newel Olds.

Dr. Olds was born in Elbert county, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Olds. His father was a well known construction engineer.

He was graduated at the old Atlanta Medical College and practiced in Byron, Ga., before coming to College Park many years ago. He had been active in his profession for more than 40 years and was one of the county's best known physicians. He was a member of the Fulton County Medical Society and of the Baptist church.

Tribute will be paid at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon at the First Baptist church in College Park. The Rev. B. J. W. Graham and the Rev. L. E. Roberts will officiate. Interment will be in the College Park cemetery with A. C. Hemperley & Sons in charge.

BEER ACT CLAUSES PROVIDE PROBLEM

Opinions Sought as State Plans To License Sales Beginning Tomorrow.

Two phases of the beer licensing act, one the free textbook clause and the other giving local authorities power to permit or reject the beverage, were being studied by the state law department yesterday as the state revenue commission planned to begin the issuance of beer licenses tomorrow.

The sale of state licenses will begin at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning at the offices of R. E. Matheson, revenue commissioner, assigned to administer the act.

The questions worrying the law department were:

Can the State Department of Education supply free textbooks in the common schools from beer revenue?

Are local governing authorities em

2-YEAR NRA BILL SLATED TO PASS

Conferees Believe All of Roosevelt's Wishes Will 'Go Through Congress.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—(AP)—Congressional and administration chiefs in secret conference today mapped NRA strategy they hoped would push through the house Tuesday and into the senate's lap Wednesday a measure extending the recovery unit's life for two years.

What would happen after the bill was returned to the senate was problematical but few of the conferees today doubted but that in the end President Roosevelt would get almost everything he wanted.

Participants in the two-hour meeting included Donald R. Richberg, NRA chief; Speaker Byrns, Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, the democratic leader; Chairman Doughton and Representatives Samuel B. Hill, democrat, Washington; Vinson, democrat, Kentucky, and Cooper, democrat, Tennessee, of the house ways and means committee.

Sturdy 72-year-old Doughton left the meeting to tell waiting newspapermen, "There isn't a bit of news." But after questioning he said an NRA extension resolution was being drafted for presentation to the house ways and means committee Monday. He added he hoped the resolution would be approved Monday.

Limit on Debate.

If so, Speaker Byrns and Chairman O'Connor, of the house rules committee, another democratic leader, said debate Tuesday would be limited to a "maximum of four hours." Byrns asked Representative Boland, of Pennsylvania, house democratic whip, to keep members on the floor so the measure could be passed and sent to the senate around 8 or 9 o'clock Tuesday night.

Some changes in the originally planned extension resolution were agreed to by the conferees. Robinson advised house committeemen to "watch their step," warning trouble would follow any attempt to do more than extend the NRA for 9 1-2 months, limit it strictly to interstate commerce and forbid price fixing.

Chairman Harrison, of the senate finance committee, sent over word that the house members should keep to a minimum their amendments to the senate's 9 1-2 months resolution. He added that "whatever the house does the senate will pass on, and the bill will not go to conference."

Bill May Include:

Nevertheless, house democratic chiefs forecast privately their bill would include:

1. A two-year NRA extension;
2. Provisions allowing code applica-

LETTER DEMANDS $200,000 RANSOM WITHIN FIVE DAYS

PARENTS DICKER WITH GANGSTERS

TACOMA, Wash., May 25.—(AP)—A formidable army of federal agents and police was reported marking time tonight to give the abductors of 9-year-old George Weyerhaeuser an opportunity to return him safely to his multi-millionaire parents.

An official source said the mobilized force of authority would give the abductors until Monday to return the boy, who disappeared yesterday while returning home from a public school for lunch.

Appearances tended to support the information the government's relentless kidnaper chasers and police were standing aside in an effort to effect the return of the young heir unharmed.

Two Ads Inserted.

While federal agents and police apparently held aloof, the grief-stricken family inserted two advertisements in the classified columns of a Seattle newspaper in an attempt to communicate with the kidnapers.

The second of the two, received by the newspaper before the first was printed but too late to prevent its insertion, read:

"Due publicity beyond our control please indicate another method of reaching you. Hurry. Relieve anguished mother. Percy Minnie."

The first appeal said:

"Expect to be ready to come Monday. Answer. Percy Minnie."

The unusual signature and the cryptic wording of the message were believed to conform to instructions given by the kidnapers.

J. P. Weyerhaeuser Jr., the distracted father, whose reputed share of the billion-dollar family lumber interests was said to total $5,000,000, was described as willing to meet the ransom demand, reputedly $200,000.

Bed Sheet Flaps.

From the palatial Weyerhaeuser home a white bed sheet flapped significantly as if serving as a signal. Its appearance was not explained.

Wheat Control Poll Favoring Retention

By the Associated Press.

The nation's wheat farmers, on the basis of fragmentary returns from 19 states in yesterday's referendum, showed a trend or more than 7 to 1 in favor of continuing the AAA's wheat regulation program in 1936.

The early crop of returns showed more than 34,000 voting for continuance, as compared with a little more than 5,000 against.

As the first sizeable returns rolled in from the heart of the wheat belt, Kansas farmers were balloting around 11,000 to 1,000 in favor of continuing the AAA plan. In some of the less productive wheat states the percentage in favor was much lower.

Wife Sues Barrymore for Divorce Charging 'Great Lover' Beat Her

LOS ANGELES, May 25.—(AP)—Dolores Costello Barrymore sued her handsome actor husband, "the great lover," John Barrymore, for divorce today and demanded all of their community property, valued at about $500,000.

Barrymore, who is cruising the Atlantic with New York friends, was declared in the suit to have an earning capacity which in one year, 1934, exceeded $350,000.

The divorce action, which followed weeks of reports of a rift between the blonde former screen actress and Barrymore, charged him with physical violence, excessive drinking and failure to provide for two children.

In addition to his community property, Mrs. Barrymore, daughter of Maurice Costello, former matinee idol, asked custody of the children, $3,000 a month for the support of them and herself, and $10,000 attorney's fee.

Barrymore's cruise guests include 19-year-old Elaine Barrie, who became acquainted with him after writing him a note when he was in a hospital recently.

The Barrymores married November 24, 1928. Their children are, Dolores, 5, and John Blyth Barrymore Jr., 3.

Mrs. Barrymore charged her husband had struck her several times in the last two years. He also used profane and offensive language to her and drank liquor to an extent causing her "great mental suffering," she said.

For the past several months, the actress charged, Barrymore neglected to provide for her and the children and left numerous household bills unpaid.

As community property, she listed the family home in Beverly Hills, the yacht, "Infanta," which was said to have cost $260,000; two expensive motor cars and stocks and other securities valued at not less than $125,000.

Barrymore left home last August against her will, she said, and has not returned or communicated with her, remaining in New York after traveling in foreign countries.

She said he struck her while they were on the yacht in Vancouver harbor and then hit her nurse when the latter tried to protect her. In the fall of 1933, she saaid, he struck her a severe blow while at their Beverly Hills home. During a train trip to Vancouver last June, he threw her from her feet into a seat in their drawing room, she charged.

Mrs. Barrymore and the children are living in a Los Angeles apartment. Barrymore denied he had ordered them to vacate their home.

A notice has been appearing in a legal publication here in which Barrymore disclaims responsibility for debts contracted by anyone other than himself after last May 3.

SPLIT CONGREGATION TO HOLD 2 SERVICES

A divided Lakewood Heights Methodist congregation will go to worship today, part of the congregation to the regular church where the Rev. Felton Williams will preach this morning and tonight and the balance to the Lakewood Heights Masonic temple, where the Rev. H. E. McBrayer, suspended pastor of the church, also will preach in the morning and at night.

The church split was caused by the suspension of the Rev. Mr. McBrayer for his participation in the recent campaign to repeal the state prohibition law.

Luther Smith, chairman of the board of stewards of the Lakewood Heights church, is among the leaders of the congregation siding with the suspended pastor and he said Saturday that he anticipated a large congregation at the Masonic temple services today. The supporters of Mr. McBrayer are planning to launch a new and independent church.

Neither Mr. Williams nor Mr. McBrayer has announced the subjects for their sermons today.

Mr. McBrayer also will speak at the James L. Key Sunday school class at 9:30 o'clock this morning, and will give his conception of the charges against him.

Mayor Key will introduce him, and plans to tell the class, which meets at the Paramount theater, that he and McBrayer have a similar complaint: "The intolerance of Methodist pastors."

Key withdrew as teacher of the Key class at the Grace Methodist church several years ago because of his outspoken views concerning the failure of prohibition and his activities in behalf of repeal.

He has one of the largest classes in the south, and the largest in Atlanta. Many of the members of Key's class at Grace followed him to the downtown theater where he established an independent, interdenominational class.

He returned to Oxford to live three years ago.

Prominent Forester.

He was a member of the Methodist church; was former president of the Southern Forestry conference; was a senior forester of the American Society of Forestry; member of the council of the Appalachian Forestry extension station at Asheville.

He was active in the move to protect Georgia timber from fires, in reforestation and in the move to convert Georgia pine into paper products.

TOBACCO SALE DATE IS TO BE SET SOON

VALDOSTA, Ga., May 25.—A meeting of the United States tobacco warehousemen will be held in Asheville June 14-15, at which time a tentative date for opening all tobacco markets will be suggested. The dates will be submitted to the United States Tobacco Association, which is to be held at White Sulphur Springs, Va., the last week in June.

Georgia warehousemen predict that prices this season will average about the same as for 1934. However, they are of the opinion the financial return will be larger because there is some increase in acreage and probably there will also be a larger yield per acre than last year.

The present crop, at this time, is regarded as excellent.

Ousted Pastor and Loyal Stewards Plan New Church

PRESBYTERIANS PROBE CHARGE OF DISSENSION

'Stirring of Strife, Schism,' Laid To Two Presbyteries by Modernists.

CINCINNATI, May 25.—(AP)—Modernist minorities petitioned the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America today to investigate what they called "flagrant examples of utter contempt" of the church constitution in the presbyteries of Philadelphia and Chester, Pa.

They charged "perversion of the presbyterian system of government" in the two Pennsylvania presbyteries; asserted actions taken are "stirring up strife, promoting party spirit and schism with all their deplorable consequences"; and asked "a thorough investigation" to determine "whatever may be deemed necessary to secure . . . a full and complete conformity to the provision of the constitution" to the church."

The charge came in memorials to the assembly. The assembly standing committee on bills and overtures at once began hearings. It will make its recommendations to the assembly later.

Filing of the memorials followed years of fundamentalist-modernist controversy in the presbyteries. The controversy in recent months has been marked by the suspension—and appeal—of Dr. J. Gresham Machen, fundamentalist leader, for failure to disband the independent board of presbyterian foreign missions ordered by the assembly of 1934. It brought repercussions in the assembly here with the challenging of the credentials of three members of the independent board.

Woman Offers To Pay All Attending Funeral

LONDON, May 25.—(UP)—A desire to be buried in her fur coat and a provision that anyone attending her funeral be paid generously, were embodied in the will of Mrs. Nellie Taylor Welch, American, made public today.

She died at Hove, Sussex, at 54, widow of J. A. Welch, of Philadelphia. She left 1,855 pounds (about $9,250). She also asked that she be buried with her platinum wedding ring and the United States flag over her coffin in her husband's vault at Hove.

Woman, 77, Who Spells Backwards Wins Title of Western New York

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 25.—(AP)—Western New York speller downers had a new "noipmahc" today—or, to make it easier for those who don't know Mrs. Mary Lewis Cole—a new champion.

The 77-year-old woman's unique ability to spell backwards words which tripped the champions in the western New York bee for the regional title amazed spectators and contestants last night.

Ace spellers foundered on "tyrannically" and registered a complete flop on "ninetieth," but without a pause for thought Mrs. Cole rattled off "Y-L-L-A-C-I-N-N-A-R-Y-T" and "H-T-E-I-T-E-N-I-N."

The show was nearly stopped as Mrs. Cole capped her performance by spelling backwards every word the judges could give her.

She was not entered in the contest, making a difficult decision unnecessary for the judges, who expressed doubt that her method was exactly kosher.

Mrs. Cole said she discovered her "gift" while attending school as a girl of ten in Hamilton, Ontario.

During a spelling test she wrote hurriedly on her slate the words as they were called off by the teacher and turned in the slate without looking at it.

The puzzled teacher called her up to explain the apparently meaningless words, which were found correctly spelled when the slate was held in front of a mirror.

"I flunked the exam, of course," said Mrs. Cole, "but since that time it is easier for me to spell backwards than the right way."

It looked as easy as rolling off a gol—pardon, a log.

Tries To Foil Holdup, Negro Shot by Bandit

Cleve Jackson, negro porter at the filling station at 235 Courtland street, was shot in the back and wounded seriously last night in foiling an attempted holdup of the station. The bandit escaped.

The thug entered the station, drew a pistol and commanded the negro to "throw 'em up." Instead, the porter reached forward quickly and grappled with the intruder. In the struggle, the gun was discharged and the negro fell to the pavement.

His cries attracted the manager, J. H. Allison; who fired several shots at the bandit, none of which are believed to have taken effect. Jackson was taker to Grady hospital, where his condition was described as serious.

BLACKFRIARS TO GIVE AESCHYLUS' TRAGEDY

As their contribution to the 1935 commencement program, the Agnes Scott Blackfriars will present a Greek tragedy, "The Libation Bearers" of Aeschylus, in the Agnes Scott gymnasium at 8:30 o'clock Monday evening before final commencement exercises on Tuesday. Jimmy Jepson, Walter Pascal, Lewis Carroll and Tom Wesley will take the male roles.

With a cast of 21, with the traditional Greek chorus, with striking beauty of costumes and scenery the play will be a memorable spectacle. It is under the direction of Miss Frances K. Gooch.

In three acts of strophe, antistrophe, and epode, the play deals with the famous episode of the vengeance of Orestes on his mother, Clytemnestra, for the murder of his father, Agamemnon, the Greek chieftain at the seige of Troy. Incited by filial loyalty, Orestes is hounded by the passion to kill his mother and her paramour yet, the deed once done, he is hounded by the ever-persistent Furies.

Vera Frances Pruet will play the part of Electra; Marion Calhoun that of Clytemnestra; Dorothy Bell that of the nurse. The leader of the chorus is Polly Vaughan. The chorus is made up of Mary Jane Evans, Betsey Fountain, Carrie Phinnie Latimer, Martha Sue Laney, Augusta King, Ida Lois McDaniel, Marguerite Morris, Frances James, Lucile Dennison, Kathryn Bowen, Hester Anne Withers, Mary Hutchinson, Virginia Byers, Elizabeth Cousins and Myrl Chafin.

U. S. AGENTS JOIN IN KIDNAP SEARCH

the heavy ranks of authority. It was learned the note instructed the family to address their answer to "Percy Minnie" through the advertising columns of a newspaper.

Among other things it was learned the writer signed himself "The Egoist;" that the envelope bore a scrawled, youthful signature, presumably that of little George.

It contained a threat of death to the little victim if the authorities interfered.

Everybody officially connected with the immediate phases of the case maintained a rigid silence. Except for the fluttering bed sheet there were no signs of anything unusual at the Weyerhaeuser home.

Sisters Unguarded.

Although the window blinds were drawn, George's little sister, Elizabeth 2, was allowed the freedom of the lawn and her 13-year-old sister, Ann, appeared once in a riding habit. Her face showed anxiety and she soon withdrew to avoid the gaze of curious persons in the street.

The home appeared not to be guarded.

The ransom letter was written on linen note paper "like a woman might use," a police official said today. At the same time a bed sheet was displayed on a rear porch of the palatial Weyerhaeuser home, possibly as a signal to the kidnapers.

The ransom note was studied for clues it might offer to solve the kidnaping.

"A slip will mean a slit," the ransome note supposedly said, adding: "We don't want to hurt anyone."

Boy Seen in Sedan.

Simultaneously Tacoma police began a hunt for a sedan in which two men and a boy were reported seen near where the young heir vanished yesterday. It was described as bearing California license plates.

It was said the note demanded the $200,000 ransom in various denominations of "new and unmarked" bills. It reputedly gave instructions that no gold certificates be included.

This indicated the fate of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, convicted kidnaper of Charles A. Lindbergh Jr., was in the mind of the writer. Gold certificates passed by Hauptmann long after the government had recalled that type of currency led to the Bronx carpenter's arrest.

Police Inspector Walter Dench, of Seattle, told of the federal "clue" after the night detective force of that city had mobilized at the disposal of the United States investigators.

Governor Charles H. Martin offered the aid of the Washington state patrol and sent five detective members of that body to the scene.

Big League Job.

"This looks like a big league job," said United States Marshal A. J. Chitty, the only federal officer here who would talk for publication.

"We have assumed now that some big shot gangsters from the east, maybe, are mixed up in it."

Besides the 15 federal agents who mobilized quickly at the scene of the investigation, others were reported on the way from distant cities.

Pall of Grief.

Little George's disappearance while en route home from school at lunch time yesterday cast a pall of worry and grief over a wide circle of friends and acquaintances of his family.

The mother was reported near collapse. The father, just returned from the funeral of his own father, J. P. Weyerhaeuser, in Rock Island, Ill., was distracted with worry.

Friends of the family kept their eyes peeled for some trace of the missing boy. Taxicab drivers cruised through the streets voluntarily in the hunt.

Border Watched.

The Canadian border, 200 miles away, was watched.

This new mystery came just as the Department of Justice supposedly was nearing the end of its long fight to exterminate kidnaping.

It has just professed to have found a solution to the year-old mystery of the June Robles abduction in Tucson, Ariz. Only a few days ago it had "mopped up" on the Edward G. Bremer kidnapers in St. Paul, another $200,000 job, by sending the alleged conspirators to prison.

Little George Weyerhaeuser, destined to follow in the footsteps of his forbears who had built a veritable empire of timber, sawmill, paper and bank holdings in the northwest, vanished while on the way home from public school.

The Weyerhaeuser Timber Company is the largest of its kind in the nation, if not in the world.

The missing boy was supposed to have walked five blocks from the Lowell school, which he attended, to the Annie Wright Seminary, to meet his sister, Ann, 13. There the family chauffeur was to have picked them up and taken them home for lunch.

Fails to Appear.

Bruce Bowman, 9, George's playmate and last to see the missing youth, told the story of the few minutes preceding his disappearance.

"I always walked home with George every day at noon," Bruce said. "Sometimes a little girl was with us. She wasn't with us yesterday.

"Joe Wheeldon was with George and me yesterday. He left a block from school and we walked on.

"When we turned the corner where my apartment is, we were talking about jumping. Then I ran ahead because George was walking too slow. I turned in at the apartment garage and said good-bye or something like that."

Little George was walking down a hill, midway in the block and only a half a block from the Annie Wright seminary when Bruce last saw him.

Not Alarmed at First.

The family did not at first become alarmed when George failed to appear for luncheon. But when 1:30 p. m. passed and there was no sign of the boy they became frightened. His teacher was notified. The police were called in.

An intensive hunt of the neighborhood ensued. Crowds gathered about the home.

Shortly after 6 p. m. a motorcycle messenger drove up to the home and went inside. The messenger refused to talk when he emerged but friends of the family later said a special delivery letter had been delivered. Whether the letter shed any light on the case was not disclosed.

Then came the federal men. W. H. Bowling, of the Department of Justice office in Seattle, rushed here. Four federal operatives sped in from Portland, Ore. Another group came by airplane from San Francisco. Still others flocked in as the investigation went on.

How many federal agents were at work on the case was another official secret. J. Edgar Hoover, head of the service in Washington, admitted his men were on the job but withheld particulars.

The Washington state law provides a maximum penalty of death for kidnaping. Conspiracy to kidnap is a felony. These penalties are in addition to the stringent federal Lindbergh law.

HUGE TRUCK PLOUGHS THROUGH OIL STATION

ATHENS, Ga., May 25.—(AP)—A mammoth interstate transport truck, loaded with freight and bound for Richmond, Va., early today ploughed through a building occupied by a gasoline filling station and store on the Atlanta highway about seven miles from here.

The driver, Jimmy Little, of Atlanta, escaped without injury. The truck was only partially damaged, but the building was demolished.

The noise produced when the truck crashed into the building aroused the entire sleeping neighborhood, many residents believing that it was an earthquake.

PHILADELPHIA, May 25.—(AP)—A 100 per cent increase in cures of cancer in rabbits by combining artificial fever and X-rays—what might be called hot X-rays—was announced today.

The treatment was cited as one of the new advances in cancer announced in the annual report of the International Cancer Research Foundation. The hot rays are one of numerous researches in the past year, sponsored by the foundation in America and Europe.

The foundation was established three years ago by W. H. Donner, of Philadelphia, with an endowment of $2,000,000 to co-ordinate a world-wide attack on cancer along many different lines.

The X-ray-fever work is under the direction of Warren L. Stafford, M. D., of Rochester, N. Y. He has used it only on animals. It has been successful only on rabbits.

Every type of artificial fever was tried, from radio waves to hot water baths. The best results came from local fever, the use of hot applications to raise the temperature of the part of the body under X-ray treatment.

Various doses of X-rays also were tried. Best was small doses given frequently. When 53 rabbits were treated this way by X-rays alone 42 per cent of their cancers disappeared.

When fever was added to the X-rays on 50 similarly afflicted rabbits the percentage of cures doubled, at 84.

Something even more promising is now being tried. This is protracting the time of the small doses of X-rays along with the fever.

"Preliminary indications," the report stated, "are that high temperatures used in conjunction with fractional irradiation treatments serve to increase the inhibiting effects of X-rays on tumor growth."

GREATER AID OFFERED CITY POWER PLANTS

Administration Seeks To Lower Rates by Threat of Construction.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—(UP)—The administration tonight pushed its national campaign for lower utility rates by promising increased financial aid to cities building municipal power and water plants.

The government heretofore loaned political sub-divisions 70 per cent and granted them 30 per cent of a project's cost. Grants have been hiked to 45 per cent and interest rates reduced from 4 to 3 per cent under the new $4,000,000,000 work-relief program.

The action, public works officials said, will reduce by almost one-third the bonded indebtedness of any municipal utility project.

It will allow cities to supply electricity and water to their consumers at lower cost than under the old program.

A political sub-division can post revenue securities as collateral for the loan, and not increase its bonded indebtedness."

Cities also were expected to use the government's offer as a means of forcing reduced rates from private utility companies even if they don't build municipal plants.

Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia gained a 30 per cent slash in costs of lighting city buildings by threatening to apply to PWA for a $15,000,000 loan and grant to finance construction of the city's own system.

KING AND QUEEN DRIVE INTO SLUMS OF LONDON

LONDON, May 25.—(UP)—The king and queen drove through the slums of east London today on the third of four scheduled jubilee drives in various quarters of the capital.

They were greeted with tremendous enthusiasm by the teeming throngs which packed the streets. The king was dressed in his scarlet-and-gold field marshal's uniform, with the blue ribbon of the Garter.

CAPTAIN VOGEL HEADS STATE TERMINIX UNIT

W. H. Sullivan, Salesmanager, Will Launch Statewide Campaign.

Captain John G. Vogel has been named general manager of the Georgia division of the Bruce Terminix Company with offices at 110 Ponce de Leon avenue, N. E., and W. H. Sullivan will serve as sales manager, it was announced yesterday as plans were being mapped for extensive expansion of the company due to the increased need and demand for the service in the state.

Captain Vogel has had wide experience in the field of termite extermination and is part owner of the Bruce Terminix units in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, D. C., and Atlanta. The organization has established offices in 26 states.

The E. L. Bruce Company, founder of the terminix units, is the world's largest manufacturer of hardwood floors. The terminix treatments are guaranteed for five years and inspections are made without additional cost at regular intervals. Customers of the organization are protected by surety bonds issued by the National Surety Company, of New York.

A state-wide sales campaign will be undertaken in the near future under the direction of Mr. Sullivan, who will devote his entire time to management of the state sales work. The expansion campaign will be undertaken at an appropriate season because it is at this time of the year that termites work their greatest havoc, Mr. Vogel said.

The annual damage in the United States from the pests has been estimated at more than $40,000,000. In countless thousands the insects attack the foundations and other wooden structures of the home.

2-YEAR NRA BILL SLATED TO PASS

tion to businesses "substantially affecting" interstate commerce;

3. A section allowing price-fixing for the prevention of monopolies.

One leader described these sections as the "minimum" program acceptable to the administration.

Originally it had been intended for the house to adopt a resolution extending the NRA for 21 1-2 months—until April 1, 1937—but what house chiefs described as "premature" newspaper publicity developed that such an extension would meet as much opposition as one for two years.

Senator Borah, republican, Idaho, and others termed the 21 1-2 months "unacceptable." Therefore house strategists decided since a senate filibuster was imminent anyhow, the house resolution might as well be two years. Then, they said, when the measure reaches the senate floor, a 21 1-2 months' extension amendment could be offered as a "compromise."

Can Be Extended.

It was emphasized today that, under present law, the president has authority to extend existing codes for 60 days. Thus, should a senate uprising delay action beyond the June 16 deadline, codes could be continued until August 16. NRA employes, meanwhile, would get no pay, but house leaders said privately "that could be fixed up."

It was added if worst came to worst the senate 21-2 months' extension could be accepted and subsequent legislation enacted to do the things the administration wanted done.

The senate's extension resolution would forbid price fixing save for mineral natural-resource industries. The house ways and means committee apparently was heading toward broadening this language to permit also anti-monopoly price fixing. On that point, Senator Borah, one of whose chief objections to NRA is price-fixing, had this to say:

"If the government can fix the prices of wages at $19 a month (the scale set for lowest-paid relief workers) and monopoly can fix the price on what the working man must have to live, you have pretty nearly squeezed out of existence the manhood of the American citizen. You make him a peon."

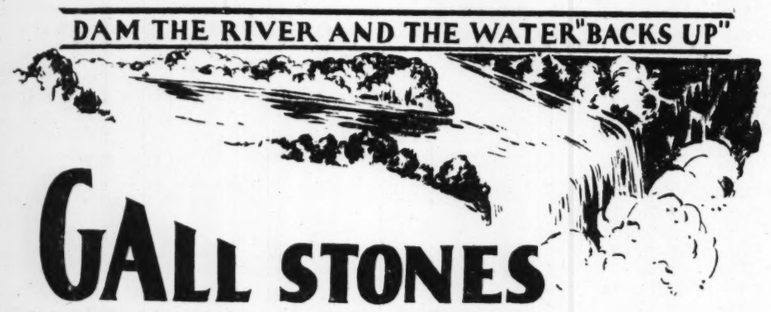

OLD SELFISH ORDER GONE, SAYS DANIELS

RICHMOND, Va., May 25.—(AP)—"The old order is not only dead, but damned, never to return to the United States," Josephus Daniels, ambassador to Mexico, said here today in an interview in which he hit at critics of the New Deal.

Mr. Daniels scored businessmen who on "bended knee asked President Roosevelt on March 4, 1933, to save their investments, which the president did, but who now, while few in number, are loudest in their criticism of the wise policies of the administration."

He emphasized "the conflict of tomorrow is between honest capitalism, private initiative and just profits on the one hand, and chaos on the other."

DAM THE RIVER AND THE WATER "BACKS UP"

GALL STONES

DAM THE PROPER FLOW OF BILE

In the liver are countless numbers of tiny ducts, which converge into two, called the right and left "hepatic" ducts. These meet outside the liver and are joined on the way to the intestines, by the "cystic" duct leading from the gall-bladder. Gallstones may occur anywhere in this system, varying in size from the smallest grain to stones large enough to stop up the large ducts.

Gallstones are composed largely of cholostrin, a substance normally present in certain quantities in the blood. They occur more often in women than men, usually past 40 years of age, and the person with gallstones is usually overweight. Typhoid fever seems to leave a pre-disposition to gallstones, caused by the infectious germs leaving roughened surfaces in the ducts or gall bladder, where the cholostrin crystals can find a place to cling and gather bulk.

Gallstones may or may not cause jaundice, depending on the size and location of the obstruction, and the amount of "backed up" bile absorbed by the blood. The most usual symptom of gallstone is "gall-bladder" colic, a severe stomach ache, localizing in the pit of the stomach and often radiating through the back, just beneath the shoulder blades. Violent contraction of the ducts trying to throw off the stone, and rubbing of the tender membranes against the stones sets up this severe pain. Relaxation by heat, hot baths or hypodermic may allow the stone to pass one way or the other and give temporary relief, until the stone gets "stuck" again. Gallstones always create a certain amount of inflammation of the gall-bladder, and the infection may become severe enough to cause rheumatism, neuritis or any of the general diseases, resulting from chronic infection.

If you know you have gallstones, be careful of your diet, do not overeat, keep your system open, and consult your doctor.

This section of the bill proposes to place the electric operating companies under federal regulation and management of a character more drastic than the federal regulation now imposed on the railroads, the letter states.

2-STORY BUILDING HERE DESTROYED BY FLAMES

Firemen Succeed in Saving Adjoining Structures in $50,000 Luckie St. Fire.

Fire originating in a downtown paint shop destroyed a two-story building here yesterday after all firemen and fire fighting equipment in the Atlanta business district had been called out to subdue it.

Damage was estimated at $50,000. Fire Chief O. J. Parker said the structure and all its contents were a "total loss."

The alarm was turned in at 4:07 a. m. (central daylight saving time) after a blaze had been discovered on the ground floor of the Georgia Paint Company at 88 Luckie street. The paint company also rented part of the second floor of the building.

Other concerns housed in the building were the Wright Co., Inc., dealers in hotel and restaurant equipment, and Peeples & Melone, Cotton Seed Products Company. The Wright company business was located on the first floor and Peeples & Melone on the second.

Firemen J. P. Robinson (1472 Allegheny, S. W.), of No. 5 company, received a cut on the knee; Fireman Jessie White (635 Bonaventure avenue, N. E.), of No. 8 company, a gash over the eye when struck by a hose nozzle; Lieutenant C. S. Rhodes (944 Austin avenue, N. E.), also of No. 8 company, cuts from falling glass, and B. P. DeFoor, of No. 4 company, cut by falling glass.

Robinson, White and DeFoor were taken to Grady hospital for treatment, but returned to the scene of the fire afterward. A stitch was taken in Robinson's knee. Lieutenant Rhodes was not hurt badly enough to undergo hospital treatment.

Chief Parker directed the fight on the blaze. So stubborn did the fire prove that 10 fire wagons, five trucks, a water tower and a salvage wagon were summoned. At the height of the blaze, more than 20 streams of water were played on the fire, three from the water tower.

A theater, a large office building and a hotel on either side of and behind the building were threatened by the blaze. Early reports said that the three buildings—the Rialto theater, the 11-story Standard building and the Postal hotel—were undamaged other than by smoke.

Hose lines were stretched into the top floor of the hotel, which is located at 87½ Fairlie street and extends back of the burned building. From the hose, streams of water were played onto the rear of the building.

To prevent the fire from spreading, water also was played periodically on the adjoining buildings.

Chief Parker said he had experienced no particular trouble from paint stored in the building. He said there were no explosions during the battle with the flames.

Less than two hours after fire companies arrived at the burning building, the chief said the blaze was under control. At that time, the fire had been extinguished except for flames in the basement. These were put out by flooding the basement.

Although there were no traces of fire and little smoke after 7 a. m., the fire fighters continued to keep streams of water on the building.

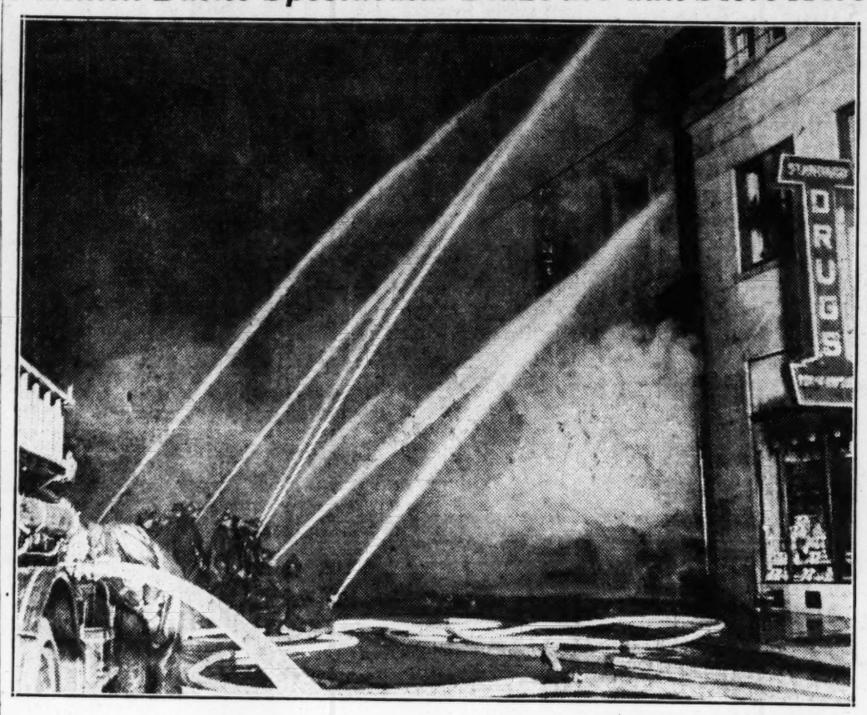

Early morning traffic was tied up as fire wagons, trucks and a network of hose blocked streets for several blocks.

It was the biggest fire Atlanta had experienced since the Atlanta freight terminals burned in January.

Frank O. Watson and George R. Lawson are listed as owners of the Georgia Paint Company and Max Wright as vice president and general manager of the Wright company. Edwin A. Peeples and Robert S. Melone are associated in the cotton products business.

The razed structure will be replaced at once by a new building, it was announced yesterday afternoon by Jake Hirsch, of 822 Lullwater road, the owner. Mr. Hirsch did not say whether another two-story building would be built or the destroyed structure replaced with a larger edifice.

THE MAN WHO FORGOT TO COLLECT

Back in 1869, shortly after the Civil War, a straight life insurance policy was issued to a man by one of the companies represented here. Five years later this policyholder suddenly moved away, leaving no address and his policy to lapse, presumably thinking the policy had no further value since he had stopped paying premiums.

It so happened that the insured had paid premiums for five years and was entitled to certain cash benefits although the policy had lapsed. But since no claim was made, the company duly recorded the policy as good for its paid-up value.

Now, practically all life insurance policies are payable for their face value or paid-up insurance value when the insured reaches a certain age.

In the case of this man the company's records showed that on a certain date the paid-up value of his policy amounting to several hundred dollars had matured.

The company was ready to pay - but the policyholder could not be found. After an exhaustive search it was learned that he had died years before, and the surviving heirs were living in various parts of the country. All heirs have been located and will receive their respective shares of this forgotten money.

These insurance companies pay - are anxious to pay - when there is a just claim.

$150,000 FUND DRIVE FOR BAPTIST HOSPITAL

Money Sought To Reduce Debt and Increase Institution Facilities.

State-wide campaign to raise $150,000 for Georgia Baptist hospital will be launched June 2, it was announced yesterday by Wiley L. Moore, prominent Atlantan and Baptist, who will be general chairman of the drive.

The $150,000 will be used to reduce the funded indebtedness of the hospital and to increase its facilities, now inadequate to meet the demands for hospitalization coming from every section of Georgia. It is planned to devote $75,000 to each purpose, Chairman Moore said.

Georgia Baptist hospital serves all the people of Georgia, irrespective of church affiliations. During the past seven years it has given treatment to 34,820 patients, of whom 5,526 were free or part free patients. It is now building a $30,000 annex which will increase its capacity from 140 to 184 beds. The annex will also provide space for another operating room, additional space for the X-ray department and laboratory and for the nurses' training school.

Two Objects.

"Nothing is so important as the health of our people," Mr. Moore said in announcing the campaign. "Our hospitals should be equipped and in a position not only to give treatment to all those who need it at a more reasonable cost than now, but to give more free hospitalization to those whose health has been undermined through worry, strain and hardship brought on by the depression and who are unable to pay for it. The proposed $150,000 fund will greatly help our fine institution to achieve both these objects."

Georgia Baptist hospital is owned, controlled and operated by the Georgia Baptist convention through its executive committee and Baptists in all sections of the state will be asked to contribute to the hospital fund.

Vice Chairmen.

The following outstanding men over the state have been named regional vice chairmen of the hospital fund to assist Mr. Moore: Abit Nix, Athens; Milton L. Fleetwood, Cartersville; John H. Cheatham, Griffin; Columbus Roberts Sr., Columbus; Lee Routh, Dalton; C. V. Nalley, Gainesville; Ben S. Thompson, Madison; Thomas J. Hamilton, Augusta; R. B. Hargrove, Waynesboro; Harvey H. Rivers, Lakeland; Henry Grady Bell, Bainbridge; Alex Hall, Moultrie; John Joe West, Albany; Dr. Claude Gray, Tifton; James Lott, Americus; Gordon G. Singleton, Macon; Ed Jarman, Baxley; James L. Lakewood Park Will Open Today With Free Grandstand Program

Lakewood park, Atlanta's great amusement park, will be the mecca for hundreds of pleasure seekers this afternoon when a free program of entertainment will be presented to mark formal opening of the park for the 1935 season.

Lakewood, upon which more than $150,000 has been spent in beautification since last fall, was opened informally yesterday afternoon. The largest opening day crowd in recent years turned out to view the many new attractions and to see the improvements made since last year, according to Mike Benton, president of the Southeastern Fair Association, operators of the recreation center.

The free vaudeville program, which will be given at 3 o'clock in front of the grandstand will feature music, dancing, an ostrich race and a mirth-provoking clown act.

Eldon D'Orio, America's leading xylophonist, will be one of the feature attractions. A former member of the United States Navy band in Washington, D'Orio has been starred on a number of nation-wide radio hookups by the National and Columbia Broadcasting Companies. He has also been a guest artist with Edwin Franko Goldman, John Phillip Sousa and the United States Marine bands.

Haliole's Hollywood Hawaiians, starring Mignon Haliole, Hawaiian dancer, will be another feature. The Hawaiians have played in a number of motion pictures, including "Flirtation Walk," "Bird of Paradise," "East of Borneo" and "China Bound." Mignon trained the Hawaiian dancers who appeared in "Bird of Paradise."

The ostrich race will provide the day's thrills. With Katherine Reid and Amy Register as jockeys, two of the giant South African birds will stage a race around the mile dirt track at Lakewood. The ostrichs are said to be capable of a mile-a-minute speed and should put on a most spectacular contest.

No such program would be complete without some clowns and President Benton has provided two of the best in the profession. They are "Buck" Wingo and "Happy" Jester. The former rides a stuffed ostrich mounted on a bicycle and will provide some mirth-provoking riding. Jester is said to be equally good.

During the intermissions music will be provided by the Sanford dance orchestra, which plays nightly at the Lakewood casino.

FLEET AND AIR FORCE ON PARADE AT HAWAII

ABOARD BATTLESHIP PENNSYLVANIA, PEARL HARBOR, Hawaii, May 25.—(AP)—The greatest air force any nation ever sent to sea saluted Hawaii today.

Four powerful wings composed of 225 fighting planes devoted the noon hour to a sky review climaxing the return of the fleet and the navy's air armada to Hawaiian shores to complete the second phase of the unprecedented mid-Pacific operations.

Spectacular as the pageant of the air proved to be, shattering all records for mass flights in this part of the world, there was an unrevealed thrill back of it.

The review was characteristic of every movement of the fleet under Admiral J. M. Reeves in the extended operations—a real test of training efficiency.

With graceful ease and amazing precision, the flying-V formations of each wing had a different speed but all came over in perfect shape. It gave Honolulu all the magnificence of a well-prepared air parade yet it was executed under conditions which officers might expect to find in time of war.

Last night not an officer of the fleet knew such an operation was to take place. Shortly before midnight Admiral Reeves wirelessed Vice Admiral Henry V. Butler, commander of aircraft squadrons, to take his three giant carriers to Oahu island (on which Honolulu is situated) by noon today and launch his planes for a review.

The Lexington, Saratoga and Ranger, aircraft carriers, shifted their courses. Aviators went into action. Wing commanders were awakened to map formation orders. Squadron commanders studied charts and plans and ship commanders made the planes ready.

The sky review signalized the fact that some 3,000,000 miles of flying had marked six weeks of far-flung maneuvers by 165 vessels of the fleet, stretching from arctic to tropical areas and from the coast westward to the international date line.

During the maneuvers there had been more than 1,900 landings by catapulted planes on the surface of the ocean under all sorts of conditions over a 5,000,000-square-mile area.

No such test of naval aviation ever before was conceived.

Not only did the operations proceed through the daylight hours in untrequented waters but there were sensational night operations from island points as well as from moving warships.

powered to open or close their communities to legal beer?

Preparing Opinion.

The law department was preparing an opinion on the textbook clause at the request of Dr. M. D. Collins, state superintendent of education. Under the act 97 per cent of the state's income from beer is allocated to the common schools to purchase books.

The constitutionality of making specific allocations to schools for purposes that may not be construed as educational was where the hitch came in, but Attorney-General M. J. Yeomans declined to say if he had reached an opinion.

When the act was before the legislature, proponents estimated beer would return in the neighborhood of $1,000,000 annually to the state. This was based on the $1.25 excise tax on 31-gallon barrels and license fees of $1,000 for brewers, $500 for wholesalers and $10 for retailers.

The revenue commission will be ready to issue permits Monday.

Privilege Not Guaranteed.

Holders of state permits, however, are not guaranteed the privilege of operating in a county or municipality without local licenses, under one interpretation of the act, which provides in Section 15-A:

"The privilege of manufacturing, distributing and selling by wholesale or retail of beverages provided in this act is purely a privilege and no business legalized by this act shall be conducted in any county or incorporated municipality of this state without a permit from the governing authority of such county or municipality, which said authority is hereby given discretionary powers as to the granting or refusal of such permits."

Some persons at the capitol have construed this to be the equivalent to local option; others that the discretionary power extends only so far as issuing or rejecting permits in so far as saying who shall and who shall not operate in a county or municipality.

Rejected in 96 Counties.

In the repeal referendum last week, when beer and wine were legalized, 63 counties ratified the beer act and 96 rejected it, but the total vote over the state gave beer an 8,000-vote majority.

If local authorities have the power to open or close their community to beer, then attorneys reasoned that governing authorities in 96 counties might abide by the expressed will of their voters, and refuse to issue permits.

Several counties were in doubt as to what authority should be charged with the responsibility, whether it be the ordinary or the county commission.

Local license fees are not limited by the act, which restricts the alcoholic content of ale and beer to 6 per cent by volume.

On announcing its beer regulations, the revenue commission issued the following statement:

Regulations Explained.

"The beer license act of 1935 became effective May 23, 1935, by the proclamation of Governor Talmadge, issued upon the certification to him of the result of the referendum of May 15.

"Under the act the manufacture and sale of beer and ale produced by the usual process of fermentation and brewing is permitted. The alcoholic content of the permitted malt beverages is limited to 6 per cent by volume.

"Every brewer must pay an annual license tax of $1,000 for each place of business. This license permits the manufacture of malt beverages and their sale at wholesale to wholesale dealers only. If the brewer sells his product to retailers, he must also qualify as a wholesale dealer and pay a license tax of $500 for each place of business as a wholesale dealer.

"Wholesale dealers must pay a license tax of $500 for each place of business. But wholesale dealers cannot sell to consumers unless they also qualify as retail dealers.

"Retail dealers must pay a license tax of $10 for each place of business.

"All licenses expire December 31 of the year issued and must be annually renewed. The license fees may be prorated on a monthly basis if the license is issued after January 1. Any fractional part of a month will be treated as an entire month.

"Licenses cannot be issued for any period ending earlier than December 31 of the year issued.

Brewers Must Give Bond.

"All brewers and all wholesale dealers must give a bond of $5,000, conditioned to pay the taxes assessed by the act which are in addition to the license fees.

"Retail dealers must also give this bond unless they buy beer on which the tax is already paid, or purchase only from brewers or wholesale dealers licensed by this state.

"In addition to the license fees, every brewer must pay a tax of $1.25 per barrel on all malt beverages sold in this state. The commission has defined a barrel as 13 cases, each containing 24 standard 12-ounce bottles. Beer sold in half-barrels and quarter-barrels is taxed at a proportionate rate. The tax amounts to 10 cents per case or five-twelfths of one cent per bottle.

"The license fees paid the revenue commission are state license fees. Brewers, wholesale dealers and retail dealers must also pay municipal license fees and county license fees where they are assessed.

"If the business is carried on in a municipality, it cannot be taxed by the county, but can be taxed by the municipality. If it is carried on outside the municipality it can be taxed by the county but not by the municipality.

Monthly Reports Required.

"All brewers and all wholesale dealers must file monthly reports within 15 days after the close of each month showing the amount of beer sold and the amount of tax thereon and must pay the tax with the report. If the wholesaler purchases only from brewers who pay the tax, the wholesaler need not again report this beverage or pay the tax thereon.

"Every brewer must also file a duplicate invoice showing all sales of malt beverages in this state during the preceeding month. This report must be filed by the fifteenth of each month. With the report the brewer shall pay the tax on such sales at the rate specified. Every wholesale dealer who purchases malt beverages on which the tax has not been paid, or from any one other than a licensed wholesaler or licensed brewer, shall also make reports of all such beer purchased and pay the tax thereon.

"Any failure to make a report or any false or incomplete reports subjects the taxpayer to a penalty of 25 per cent of the gross tax. The amount due is subject to the addition of interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each month of delinquency.

"Every brewer, every wholesale dealer and every retail dealer must keep and preserve for three years a record of all malt beverages manufactured, purchased and sold. These records shall be available at all times to the commission or any member or agent of the commission for inspection.

Failure to Report Is Misdemeanor.

"Failure to make the reports required is a misdemeanor. Manufacturing or selling malt beverages without a license is a misdemeanor. Failure to pay any tax imposed is a misdemeanor.

"Any violation of any rule of the commission is a misdemeanor.

"Every brewer and every wholesale dealer, and every retail dealer who purchases beverages on which the tax has not been paid or purchases from any one other than a licensed wholesaler or retailer, must give bond in the amount of $5,000 conditioned to pay the tax. The bond must be signed by a surety company licensed to do business in Georgia. In lieu of bond, a deposit of $5,000 in cash or in bonds of the United States, the State of Georgia, or any political subdivision of the state may be made. Any deposit of bonds must be approved by the commission. Carrying on business without filing this bond, where a bond is required, is a misdemeanor.

"The revenue commission will be ready by 10 a. m. Monday, May 27, to supply all applicants with blank forms of application and blank form of bonds. It has issued rules and regulations in conformity with the act, copies of which will be furnished upon application."

STATE HOSPITAL CUTS DEFICIT DURING 1934

The state hospital at Milledgeville decreased its operating deficit from $84,289 to $55,324 in 1934 despite the fact the average number of patients increased 300, an audit of the institution revealed yesterday. Report of the audit was made by State Auditor Tom Wisdom to Governor Eugene Talmadge.

The audit showed the receipts and expenditures at the institution, now headed by Dr. John W. Oden, were $979,503 during the year.

The Wisdom report also revealed $17,291 was expended for construction during the year, the new buildings, including two dormitories, an amusement hall, a new dining room, a new ward, an abattoir and a cannery.

The audit showed the per capita cost per patient was 41 3-4 cents per day. The number of patients in the hospital on January 1, 1934, was 5,948 and on December 31, 6,146. The daily average was 6,070.

"The bookkeeping is adequate for the needs of the institution and the recording and filing are well handled," the auditor reported. "The business management is to be commended for the excellent showing made during the year."

The hospital's income was obtained $868,296 from the state appropriation and other sources, including $102,525 from products of operating activities. Of the expenditures $382,524 went for personal services and $554,102 for supplies. The balance was expended for various needs.

SALARY RESTORATION IMPOSSIBLE, SAYS KEY

Mayor Key yesterday barred all hope of any serious effort to restore salary slashes imposed on the 4,000 employes of the municipality when he asserted the budget commission will not increase its anticipations for the June finance sheet.

He called the commission into session for 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, but after preliminary conferences with Councilman Aubrey Milam, chairman of the finance committee, and B. Graham West, city comptroller, both of whom are members of the budget body and who with Key compose a majority of that body, he said it would be impossible to hike estimated receipts for the year.

In fact the city will be faced with a serious problem is providing $23,000 due the state for gasoline taxes.

Milam said the finance committee will meet at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon to begin preparation of the June sheet.

CITY MANAGER RULE SOUGHT FOR ATLANTA

Councilman White Will Advocate Change in Charter Before Council.

Establishment of a council-city manager form of government for Atlanta modeled after the Cincinnati system will be proposed by Councilman John A. White, he announced yesterday.

White proposes to draw a new charter and offer it to council to be submitted to the voters in the 1936 municipal primary. He said yesterday it probably will take a month to complete the draft.

The White decision follows submission of an audit last week by Charles J. Metz, president of the Audit Company of the South, in which Metz cited the efficiency of the Cincinnati government and suggested a "more centralized local government for greater efficiency and economy."

Defeated 8 Years Ago.

Eight years ago yesterday, Atlanta citizens turned down a city manager form of government in a city-wide referendum. Previously it had recurred several time., sponsored for the most part by the Atlanta League of Women Voters.

"I will introduce at an early date the Cincinnati form of municipal government to be presented to the voters of Atlanta in the 1936 primary," White said yesterday.

"The reason for the early introduction is for the purpose of allowing study for at least a year in order that Atlantans may become thoroughly familiar with it and that all persons may qualify to vote on it.

"No reflection is cast upon the mayor and council, or any officer or employe of the city of Atlanta. They are all well qualified, but are laboring under a wornout system of municipal government, just as much out of date as horses and buggies would be on Peachtree street. The people of Atlanta and all officers know this to be true and should come forward in a patriotic way and help place in a modern system of government that saved Cincinnati, which was in exactly the same condition and shape as Atlanta today.

Main Advantages.

"The main reason for the new system is as follows:

"Centralize power and place responsibility.

"Increase efficiency.

"Reduce the cost of operation.

"All persons connected with the city of Atlanta know we are carrying a deficit that will never be wiped out except by a change in system and that the city government is at east 25 per cent top-heavy.

"The membership of council and the number of city wards will be reduced January 1, 1937, in conformity with a legislative edict.

"The proposed change to the council-city manager form of government will not affect the personnel of that body nor will it affect the mayor. They will remain as the legislative group. The change will not affect the salaries of policemen, firemen, pensions or civil service, but will weed out political parasites, place other employes in a better condition, eventually increase the pay of efficient employes and free them of the vacillations of political fortune.

Foresees Opposition.

"There will be opposition from the politicians. They will assert it can not be done and it can't be done by them. The people, however, can do it as they did in Cincinnati and save their government, reduce the cost of government, the tax rate and do other fine things, through the efficiency which followed the change.

"I will ask every civic organization, political, social, fraternal and all to lend their support and co-operation and ask all persons to register so they may vote. If they do, I fear not the outcome, for I know the citizens want their government cost reduced and taxes lowered. This can not be done under the present system, and with my experience with the city, I respectfullly challenge anyone on this question."

Under the White plan, the city manager would be the chief executive of the city. He would appoint virtually all important department heads, hire and fire employes and otherwise administer and direct affairs of the municipality. The council, however, would have the right to remove the manager for cause, but only after a hearing had been granted in the event the removal was attempted after the manager had held his office for six months or longer.

White cited a long list of accomplishments which were carried on the city manager's page of Cincinnati Municipal Activities, a booklet, in support of his contentions.

Cincinnati's Record.

Among the list were the following outstanding items for 1934:

Cincinnati bonds sold for an average yield of 2.55 per cent, said to be an all-time record in municipal history.

Reduced the gross debt $5,291,740.

Had a surplus of $485,931 after all bills were paid.

Issued no deficiency bonds, paid off all bonds issued for relief in 1932, did not borrow any money from the banks and had a surplus in every trust and operating fund.

The 1933 tax rate was $10.69 per $1,000 property valuation; $9.92 in 1934, and $8.15 in 1935.

Constructed 32 miles of new sewers —the largest program in any one year in the history of the city.

AIR MAIL IN EVERY CITY IN TEN YEARS---FARLEY

Prediction Follows First Delivery Made Directly to Postoffice.

PHILADELPHIA, May 25.—(AP)—Air mail service within the next ten years for every city and town of any size was predicted today by Postmaster-General James A. Farley.

He made his prediction a few minutes after a silver-bodied auto-gyro landed on the roof of the new Philadelphia postoffice, marking the first time mail was delivered directly to a post office by plane and opening regular shuttle service between the newly dedicated building and Camden airport.

"This is a milestone that marks the nation's path back to recovery," Farley said, after taking the first pouch of mail from the plane. A crowd estimated at 10,000 cheered.

No previous rehearsal of the landing was held. The plane, piloted by Louis Levy, hovered over the tiny landing field—396 by 278 feet—with its yellow rotors turning slowly, then dropped.

The indicators showed a wind shifting uncertainly. A current of air caught the plane as it neared the roof and it reared suddenly. Then it landed gently a few feet from where Farley stood.

A few minutes later another autogyro arrived, piloted by James G. Ray. Farley handed Ray a pouch of mail, first to leave for the air from a postoffice roof and the 'gyro rose in a perpendicular flight into the air over the Schuylkill river.

The new postoffice building dedicated by Farley is the only one accessible by air, water, motor and rail.

The river is navigable for small boats. The main line tracks of the Pennsylvania railroad run directly beneath the building. Chutes have been provided to speed mail from the postoffice to the trains, while mail from the trains will be rushed to the building by means of conveyors.

"usurp" the authority of the state highway board.

Neither Vinson nor MacDonald had any statement today.

The law, Tarver said, expressly gives to the state board the right to initiate all federal aid projects, but gives to the bureau of public roads the veto power.

As to salaries in the Georgia department, the representative said he had received a letter from John A. Heck, member of the highway board, stating: "Candidly, we do not feel that it is any business of the bureau of roads as to what amount we pay our engineers."

To Furnish Supervision.

Heck was quoted as saying the board will furnish high-grade supervision for all jobs and "will welcome any specific suggestion or criticism from the bureau of public roads, and endeavor to correct any specific trouble that may be pointed out."

Tarver said he was conveying this information to MacDonald, and added:

"If he is really basing his disapproval of this pending program on inadequate engineering facilities, he should certainly promptly and specifically point out where and in what particulars this inadequacy exists. Otherwise, it may be taken for granted that his continued refusal to approve the Georgia program is occasioned by the refusal of the state board to initiate the Balls Ferry project and nothing else."

GOVERNOR AND HECK BLAME THE BALL'S FERRY PROJECT

"Work all over Georgia is being delayed because of this Ball's Ferry project," Governor Eugene Talmadge, and John Heck, member of the highway commission, asserted last night in commenting on the Bureau of Roads' refusal to approve the $1,500,000 projects for Georgia.

"The charge that Georgia's engineer are not capable is absurd," Heck said.

"In all the millions of dollars' worth of construction done in this state, the bureau cannot find anything of any importance to criticize. Objections to some things have been made, but in every instance were corrected to meet specifications.

"When one considers the magnitude of the work being done through the highway board by its engineers, one realizes that a few mistakes, perhaps, will be made. The bureau has found only about 10 in Georgia and every one of them was of minor importance.

"We asked the bureau to make specific criticisms of incapacity as exhibited by Georgia's engineers. It could not point to a single thing, and all its talk was in generalities of no value," Heck declared.

Both the governor and Heck felt that the charge against the engineers was a stall by the bureau. The crux of the situation lies, they said, and, as Congressman Tarver charged, in Washington.

Congressman Vinson wants the Ball's Ferry bridge constructed in his district but Heck said only one delegation of 12 people, headed by Vinson, had ever called on the highway board.

"We've got more important projects to complete before taking up this one," he said.

Both Governor Talmadge and the board member pointed out that a road paralleling the Ball's Ferry route is now being paved and is capable of serving the counties through which it passes.

"The cost of this Ball's Ferry bridge would be heavy," declared the governor. "The bridge itself would cost something like $280,000.

"It would be necessary to grade and pave 20 miles additional roads to make this bridge of any use to anyone, and this would cost approximately $1,000,000."

"The highway board is running the business of building roads in Georgia, not the bureau of roads in Washington," asserted Heck.

"We feel," he said, "that it is Georgia's business to build federal aid roads to the satisfaction of the government, but until we fail to give satisfaction because of the incapability of our engineers we will continue to operate the highway department as we see fit."

The governor flatly denies that Georgia highway engineers are so underpaid they are not doing good work.

Trade Openings in Latin Americas Via Air Are Visioned for Atlanta

Atlanta was visioned as the hub of a vast export trade carried on with Central and South America in an address on "Foreign Trade Expansion," given last Thursday by Arthur E. Curtis, public relations director of the Caribbean division of Pan-American Airways System before the Atlanta Advertising Club.

Clipper ship service of Pan-American Airways has opened up a vast potential trade area for Atlanta, with 32 countries and colonies of the West Indies, Central and South America almost at the city's front door, Mr. Curtis said. Conquest of the air has made the Georgia capital a "seaport" in the "sea" of the air in which is operated a vast system of international railways of the sky, paradoxical as it may sound.

"Atlanta is only four hours from Miami, the air gateway between the Americas," the speaker declared. "In terms of air transport, your city is next door to Latin America. Sea water means nothing to air transport; we must think of the countries to the south as adjoining states and there are now 32 of these countries and colonies right at your front door.

"You are only six hours' travel time from Havana, a city of 700,000; six hours from Nassau; 11 hours from all of Cuba; the same distance from Jamaica or Haiti. Two days takes you—or your mail or merchandise—to northern South America, the Dominican Republic or Puerto Rico.

"The Caribbean countries alone normally produce a billion dollars' worth of business with the United States a year. Little Puerto Rico, a possession of Uncle Sam, with its 1,600,000 consumers, bought from the United States in a normal year $46,000,000 worth of goods, including many of the products of Georgia.

"Atlanta businessmen should go after this Central and South American trade. With shipping and travel facilities of Pan-American Airways, you can capture the lion's share of the trade available and make your city the great distribution point of the country, even as it is now the key city of railway transportation in the southeast."

2 Couples, Married for 50 Years, Warn Against Dictatorship in Home

LOS ANGELES, May 25.—(AP)—A dictator in the home is not conducive to a lasting union, say two brothers who married two sisters 50 years ago.

"Genuine and lasting love"—precluding the necessity for any marital commandments—is the formula that has carried them to a double golden wedding anniversary to be observed May 31.

The couples are Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hopping and Mr. and Mrs. Carl Hopping, who met on a Burlington, Iowa, ice skating rink in 1885. Frank Hopping is 70, his wife 69. Carl is 73, his wife 67.

"When Frank first called on me," Mrs. Frank Hopping said, "he brought his brother along—and so two romances started simultaneously."

The quartet drafted "10 marriage rules" which they said "might help others."

They are:

1. Marry young.
2. No married woman should be allowed to hold a job.
3. Have children.
4. Give time and thought to preparing meals; a man thinks of cooking in selecting a wife.
4. Disputes are a necessary and wholesome phase of marriage, but should not lead to a dictatorship.
6. Don't expect luxuries without sacrifice.
7. Be thrifty.
8. Be self-reliant.
9. Be a real mother and father to your cheildren.
10. Maintain an old-fashioned home, which was the center of life and the meeting place of all, young and old.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., May 25. (AP)—Estate of the late Alfred I. duPont was valued at $32,736,933.63 in a petition filed as his will was probated today.

DuPont, who died at his estate here April 29, left the bulk of the fortune to Nemours Foundation, charitable organization.

The widow, formerly Miss Jessie Ball, will receive a $200,000 annuity for life, the Jacksonville estate and contents of the duPont estate at Wilmington, Del.

Grounds and buildings of the Wilmington estate, Nemours, will be used for the "care and treatment of crippled children, or old men and women, particularly old couples, first consideration being given residents of Delaware."

Executors were named as Mrs. duPont; Edward Ball, a brother-in-law, and Reginal Huidekoper, a son-in-law, of Washington.

The probate court has not yet named appraisers to make a detailed valuation of various assets.

A number of duPont's employes received $1,000 each.

Injured when his automobile overturned as he attempted to avoid striking another machine, Arthur Herford, of Sarasota, Fla., was admitted to Grady hospital last night with a possible fracture of the skull.

Herford said he swerved to miss another car on the Dixie highway near Hapeville.

Corn Peddler Jailed; Wares of Liquid Kind

No longer will David Lee, 20-year-old negro, of 562 Terry street, attempt to peddle corn from a bicycle. He is now in Fulton tower, put there by Deputy Sheriffs S. G. Davies and Billy Moore.

The corn, officers said, was of the liquid variety and was in a one-gallon can. The arrest was made on Butler street and the bicycle rider was charged with violation of the state prohibition law.

AUSTRIA STILL QUIET UNDER STARHEMBERG

VIENNA, May 25.—(UP)—Austria, seething lately with latent internal unrest, was quiet tonight under the semi-dictatorship of Prince Ernst Rudiger von Starhemberg, aristocratic leader of the "new patriots."

Von Starhemberg was in command of all Austria's armed forces, including the regular army and the semi-military organizations.

It was expected, now that the military provisions of the Versailles treaty are regarded as dead, that he would soon be in command of an effective army, regular and supplementary, of more than 150,000.

PEDESTRIAN IS KILLED BY DODGING MOTORIST

Involuntary Manslaughter Charged to Driver in Man's Death.

Because neither motorist nor pedestrian could make up his mind which way to go, Sam Bryant, 58, of Martin street, East Point, was run over and killed last night on Stewart avenue by an automobile driven by J. C. Brown, 27, of Mountain View.

Brown told county police that Bryant started across Stewart avenue at Cleveland avenue on foot, as the Mountain View man was coming toward Atlanta in his car.

When the motorist turned to the left to avoid the pedestrian, Bryant hurried in that direction. Brown said he then cut back to the right and Bryant ran directly into the path of his machine, being knocked high in the air. He was dead on arrival at Grady hospital.

Bryant was taken to the hospital in the ambulance of Howard L. Carmichael, who will announce funeral arrangements. He is survived by a son.

Drug Which Lowers Temperature Is Discovered at Syracuse School

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE, Associated Press Science Editor.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 25.—(AP) Something rare in medicine, a drug which lowers temperature, has been found at the Syracuse University School of Medicine.

The discovery of the temperature effect is one of those unexpected things scientists are continually finding during laboratory investigations.

The substance is dinitrosylcilic acid which was made synthetically, that is artificially. Its chief former use was as a color indicator in testing sugar.

It attracted the attention of R. K. Brewer, M. D., and M. S. Dooley, M. D., at Syracuse University, because of wide medical interest in a similar substance, dinitrophenol.

This latter compound has found general use on the market for reducing weight. It seepds up metabolism, the bodily production of energy, a process which appears to consume extra weight in some instances.

But dinitrophenol also sometimes speeds up the energy making so much that it induces fever and damages the liver. So its kindred compound would be expected to have important effects on the living body.

The animals' temperatures dropped, in some cases seven degrees Fahrenheit. That presumably if tried on a human being would be fatal.

Yet the experiment shows the existence of a powerful means of combating high fever. Whether the new drug would lower fever is not yet known. The next step in the investigation at Syracuse Medical College is to learn whether the dinitrosalycilic acid is toxic.

MAN SLAYS STRANGER ON SALOON WAGER

MEXICO, D. F., May 25.—(AP)—Six friends sitting in a saloon decided to play dice, the loser to pay for a round of drinks, police said today—and to kill the first man to enter.

Felix Guiterrez Ramirez, a slaughter house employe known as "The Marihuano," was the loser.

He paid the bill and waited. Within a few minutes a man entered and was stabbed through the heart.

The victim, who was not identified, had never been in the saloon before, the proprietor said.

Woman Seeks To Enter Poor Home With $3,900

OCONOMOWOC, Wis., May 25. (UP)—Miss Mary Gallagher, 80, went to county authorities and told them she was destitute. County Judge David W. Agnew decided there was nothing to do but commit her to the poor farm and he signed a commitment order.

While preparing to move her from her home police found an old suitcase containing $3,900 in silver and old bank notes. They were amazed and asked Miss Gallagher if she didn't know about her treasure.

"Oh, yes," she said, "but you see I've been saving that for a rainy day."

STATE SCHOOL ACTION DEFERRED BY HOPKINS

Press of Affairs Delays Decision on Georgia's Plea for Funds.

Action by Harry L. Hopkins, relief administrator, on the extension of federal aid for school teachers of Georgia has been delayed until early this week because of the press of national affairs, it was announced yesterday in Washington.

Hopkins and Miss Gay B. Shepperson, Georgia relief and work administrator, who is in Washington, will discuss the Georgia school problem at the earliest opportunity, which will probably be tomorrow or Tuesday, it was said at the offices of the national relief administrator.

Miss Shepperson is understood to have suggested to relief headquarters a plan whereby any additional aid for schools would be based on conditions existing in the various counties. Whether this plan will be acceptable to Administrator Hopkins is not known.

The Federal Emergency Relief Administration announced a plan of aiding the school teachers a month ago. Under it, salaries of teachers will be paid retroactive only to April 15. This eliminates more than 1,000 teachers, most of them unpaid since February 1.

Dr. M. D. Collins, Georgia superintendent of schools, and his committee of educators representing the unpaid teachers, will remain in Washington until the conference between Hopkins and Miss Shepperson. The Georgia delegation is optimistic over a satisfactory settlement, expressing the opinion that Hopkins would not agree to reconsider the April 19 retroactive date were he not disposed to compromise.

WORKERS' INSURANCE MADE LAW BY SHOLTZ

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., May 25.—(AP)—Governor Dave Sholtz' signature today made law of the workmen's compensation act, providing a system of insurance for workers in many industrial lines.

Legislative action was completed on a bill setting up a system of old-age pensions for Florida citizens 65 years old or older who are in need and for those physically unable to provide for themselves. Both branches of the legislature agreed on a conference committee report settling differences over the bill which, however, does not finance the pensions.

As many legislators expressed belief the state constitution prohibits use of state funds for old-age pensions or other forms of relief, a proposed constitutional amendment was approved by both house and senate but now is in conference committee for settlement of minor disagreements.

CATHOLICS WOULD BAR MEXICO TO TOURISTS

Press Association To Protest Entries Into Country for Religious Reasons.

Catholic editors yesterday pledged themselves to protest against American tourists entering Mexico as long as present religious conditions prevail there.

The editors, attending the annual convention of the Catholic Press Association of the United States, closed their three-day meeting here after re-electing Joseph J. Quinn, of Oklahoma City, their president.

Resolutions adopted by the association said the Catholic press had been "the only articulate voice expressing the facts about Mexico," and urged that every effort be made to "clear up the situation."

One speaker suggested on the floor of the convention that Catholic tourists boycott Mexico, but no action was taken in this regard.

Officers and directors re-elected were Joseph H. Meier, of Chicago, secretary; Charles H. Ridder, of New York, treasurer, and Dr. Thomas P. Hart, of Cincinnati; the Rev. Jerome Depencier, of Chicago, and Richard Reid, of Augusta, directors.

In other resolutions the editors expressed their determination to continue the campaign for "further improvements much needed in popular entertainment." They agreed to extend their activities toward "cleaning up" motion picture shows to stage productions presented in connection with motion pictures.

NEW PLAN ANNOUNCED BY INSURANCE AGENCY

Monthly Payment Plan for Premiums on All Forms of Insurance.

Spratlin, Harrington & Thomas, one of Atlanta's largest insurance agencies, have originated a plan whereby all forms of insurance, including automobile and fire, can noy be purchased by the public and the premiums paid monthly.

Frank M. Spratlin, president of the agency, stated: "We realized that a large percentage of the public had been unable to avail themselves of essential insurance protection as they could not pay the entire premium at the time the policy was secured. In order to enable them to secure necessary insurance protection, we have developed our "monthly insurance budget plan" so that the cost of insurance can be paid monthly as are the other necessities of life."

Spratlin, Harrington & Thomas was established in 1912 and represent only leading stock insurance companies. The officials of the agency are: Frank M. Spratlin, president; W. Eugene Harrington, vice president; W. Julian Thomas, vice president; K. B. Hancock, vice president, and Fleming Law, secretary-treasurer.

DIRECTOR JOHNSTON EXPLAINS PWA RULES

Government Will Grant 45 Per Cent of Total Cost, He Announces.

Grants of 45 per cent of total cost of proposed Public Works Administration projects will be allowed Georgia municipalities and other governmental agencies desiring to avail themselves of PWA funds, it was announced yesterday by J. Houstoun Johnston, acting state director of the PWA.

"I have just received a telegram from Horatio B. Hackett, assistant administrator of the PWA, informing me that agencies desiring to obtain PWA funds will be allowed money on the basis of 55 per cent loan and 45 per cent grant," Mr. Johnston said. "The combined loan and grant will be based on the cost of the project to the government and the same wage scale as now used on PWA projects will prevail."

"Loan and grant applications acceptable for examination basis of 55 per cent loan and 45 per cent grant, both based on cost of project to government. Three per cent interest rate. Wages same as now effective PWA projects. Await detailed instructions and application blanks, which will be forwarded earliest possible moment."

"In explanation of the above telegram so far as I have been informed there will be no change in the policy of the government in accepting general obligation bonds as security, or other forms of security acceptable to the government. The rate of interest charged for the general obligation bonds will be 3 per cent, with the grant 45 per cent of the cost of labor and materials. This applies to all who file applications for the loan and grant," Mr. Johnston declared.

"In the case of an applicant wishing to file application for the grant only, a grand of 45 per cent will be allowed by the government. This will apply where an applicant is already in possession of funds or where an applicant can dispose of securities."

Prospective applicants were urged by Mr. Johnston to have preliminary plans and estimates of proposed projects prepared so that as soon as application blanks are sent out the applicant will be in position to take immediate action.

UNIVERSAL SERVICE for the Universal Car

THE SIGN OF GOOD SERVICE

IN THE very beginning the Ford Motor Company realized the importance of good service. It was the first to standardize tools and equipment and establish low flat charges for parts and repairs. Today in any community you can see how far Ford has progressed toward providing service as good as the car.

The thousands of modern Ford dealerships are within reach of most of the millions of Ford owners. Other thousands of dependable garages and service stations—identified by the Ford sign—provide supplementary service and Genuine Ford Parts.

When you buy a Ford you can get the kind of service a good car deserves. One of the features is precision workmanship. You can exchange a used Ford engine, carburetor, distributor, fuel pump, generator and other assemblies for "FACTORY EXCHANGE" units at very much less than the usual replacement or repair cost.

This is "Universal Service" in every respect, broadening constantly through the addition of Ford Neighborhood Service Stations, where you can get extra-quick service—gasoline, oil, lubrication and repairs.

TOKEN PLAN ON BOOKS IS ADOPTED BY RICH'S

Now that the time for graduation and bon voyage gifts is here again, it is very helpful to find that Rich's Book Shop has instituted the book token plan, for the first time in Atlanta or the south, but a plan which has proved successful and popular in England for a number of years.

The Book Token plan completely eliminates any possibility of duplicating a book which the gift recipient has already, or of giving a book which may not please a particulnr taste. For by this plan the donor of the gift simply pays for the book and is given a token card which may be sent directly from the book shop to the gift recipient, the card entitles the person who presents it to any book he may fancy, for the amount specified on the card.

The token plan greatly facilitates the problem of giving a pleasing and appropriate gift and is very useful when one wishes to give a rare or unusual book, not ordinarily carried in the book shop, for the card may be presented to the giftee on the desired date and the book will be delivered as soon as it is obtained from the publisher, upon presentation of the token card.

DUCE KEEPS ETHIOPIA WAR DOOR OPEN

Over Seas

By CHARLES E. HARNER, Associated Press Foreign Staff.

A steadily increasing mass of rumors in Paris and Berlin has indicated through recent weeks that the French and German governments are disposed to believe that there would be value in direct conversations between Pierre Laval, France's foreign minister, and Reichsfuehrer Hitler.

For any such conference, a period of diplomatic preparations is necessary, for each government must be thoroughly aware of the subjects its representative intends to discuss with the other and, naturally, neither government can be in a position to announce such a meeting as certain until the diplomatic foundations are laid.

M. Laval has diplomatically evaded giving a positive statement as to his intentions, but he certainly has not indicated that he has no desire to go to Berlin. "There is," he said, "no question for the moment of such a visit."

King Carol, of Rumania, the nation whose political importance is based to such an extent on its posision in the Little Entente with Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia, intends shortly to pay a visit of state to Paris. Thus he will follow the precedent intended by another Little Entente sovereign, King Alexander, of Yugoslavia, who met death by an assassin's bullets in Marseille last year as he journeyed toward the French capital from his own.

King Alexander had assigned to himself the task of bringing about friendly relations with Bulgaria, in which he was successful, and in helping cement France's wall of allies around Germany, a mission cut short by his murder.

King Carol, too, it is safe to assume, hopes to obtain from France reiterations of that nation's friendship and, by his trip, show the world that Rumania and, by inference, the Little Entente, still looks to France as its big friend.

These two visits, rumored and projected, have precedent in recent European history. There was, for example, the gathering at Stresa, Italy, participated in personally by Premier Benito Mussolini, Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, of Great Britain, and Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin, of France. The premiers succeeded in outlining the joint plan of action later undertaken by the League of Nations council at Geneva, involving the censuring of Germany for her rearmament.

The Stresa conference, in turn, was preceded by the famous visit of Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary, and Captain Anthony Eden, British lord privy seal, to Berlin, where they talked with Hitler. Captain Eden later conferred with other government heads in Moscow, Warsaw and Prahn.

Diplomatic sources in Berlin are the authority for the belief that Hitler is ready an anxious for a conference with Laval. He is represented as believing that much of the rancor existing between his country and the neighbor across the Rhine can be removed by an intimate and friendly talk.

NAZIS DEMAND COLONIES RIGHTS

Germany Declines To Discuss Arms With Present Army Strength.

LONDON, May 25.—(AP)—A nazi demand for recognition of Germany's right to hold colonies was revealed here today as Britain and Germany launched diplomatic exchanges calculated to give substance to peace suggestions Adolf Hitler made in his reichstag speech Tuesday.

Official quarters said the call Sir Eric Phipps, British ambassador to Berlin, made at the foreign office yesterday was the start of conversations designed to get more specific information concerning points raised in Hitler's speech.

Baron Konstantin von Neurath, the German foreign minister, told Phipps that while Germany does not want colonies or mandates just now, she insists that the former Allies recognize in some tangible way her right to have them before the reich returns to the League of Nations.

Germany also notified Britain that she could not discuss armaments pacts until she had attained full military equality with Russia.

Von Neurath indicated Germany's announced army of 550,000 men could not be considered adequate as long as the Red army reputedly had nearly 1,000,000 men under arms.

In aiming at air parity with her neighbors, Germany has mainly in mind Russia's force of 2,300 fighting planes, most of which are in Europe.

This is regarded most seriously in official British quarters, since England's new home defense air program contemplates only 1,500 planes. Stanley Baldwin, lord president of the council, recently told commons that the government, lacking exact information as to Germany's air strength, was taking the French figure as its measure. France has 1,500 planes at home and in north Africa.

Brain That Makes a Man Human Removed, Patient Still Normal

NEW YORK, May 25.—(AP)—The case of a 45-year-old New York man who with one-seventh of his brain removed lives in robust good health and evident happiness was disclosed today by the medical information bureau of the New York Academy of Medicine. The patient was identiifed as "Mr. A."

The academy's spokesman said the man's reactions after an unusual operation four years ago in Johns Hopkins hospital in Baltimore for the removal of a brain tumor have given research workers new knowledge of the functions of the brain.

"Mr. A.," it was said, is a financially independent businessman with a reputation as a wit and humorist. Although unable to remain in business after the operation he has adjusted himself to his new life of leisure. Both frontal lobes of the brain were removed.

"To understand what the change was," the academy spokesman continued, "it is well to remember the frontal lobes of the brain do not exist in animals in evolution prior to the mammalian stage.

"In general, it is that part of the brain which enables a man to be a social being. It endows him wth self-restraint. This self-restraint is a learned thing, and the individual learns it is profitable both for the reaping of rewards and the escape from punishment.

"What has happened to 'Mr. A' is a lessening of his self-restraints. By that is not implied any moral dereliction. It simply means he shows his natural feelings more than most adults. If he likes you he lets you know it, and if he doesn't he lets you know that, too.

"He has given up his career, but he is far from being an invalid. He goes to the theater, to the movies, takes walks, reads, plays poker, checkers and pinochle. He usually wins at poker, but delays the game because of his delight in expressing himself freely on any subject that pops into his head."

FRANCE BATTLES TO STEADY FRANC

Flandin To Seek Dictatorial Powers To Balance National Budget.

PARIS, May 25.—(AP)—France tonight was fighting to head off the flight from the franc while Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin prepared to ask the chamber of deputies for dictatorial powers to balance the budget.

The Bank of France today boosted its discount rate to 4 per cent, effective Monday, in another effort to crush what it called "speculation" against French currency. Thursday's increase from 2 1-2 to 3 per cent failed to halt drainage of gold from its vaults.

Currency in circulation is 97 per cent covered by gold, but the bank obviously is disturbed at the loss of 3,000,000,000 francs worth of gold (about $200,000,000) in seven weeks and felt it necessary again to interfere.

A stiff political battle in the chamber apparently faces the premier in his demand for powers paralleling those granted Premier Raymond Poncare in 1926, when he stabilized the sinking franc.

Some deputies predict the government's overthrow within two weeks if Flandin persists in his deflationary policy.

Friends of the towering premier urge patriotic union in the face of the crisis.

The bank's action Thursday in boosting the discount rate one-half per cent served fleetingly to strengthen the franc against other currencies, but the dollar and the pound quickly resumed their upward march.

In view of Flandin's fractured arm, suffered in an automobile accident, Minister of Finance Louis Germain-Martin is expected to go before the chamber's finance committee Wednesday, soon after parliament reconvenes, to explain the financial and economic situation and the government's program.

RUM SMUGGLERS ON TINY ISLANDS SMASHED BY PACT

ST. PIERRE, Miquelon, May 25.—(AP)—A future bleak as the surf-swept rocks of the three tiny islands which comprise this remnant of France's once mighty North American empire tonight faced the colony's handful of fishermen habitants.

News of a crushing blow, aimed to dry up irrevocably the illicit rum trade which, during prohibition in the United States and for some time thereafter, poured a stream of golden dollars upon these islands, had just reached here.

It was contained in a new agreement between the United States and France for strict regulation against exportation of liquor to the United states.

Coming at a time when the domestic fishing business, upon which many once prosperous rum runners of the prohibition era have been forced to fall back, had reached a new low, and practically every otherwise unemployed man was working on the roads for $1.50 a day, the news caused consternation.

Under the new agreement not only must skippers of alcohol-laden vessels specify the port to which they intend to sail but they must post substantial bond for the actual delivery of their cargo.

EPISCOPAL BISHOP SCOUTS PAPAL UNION

CHICAGO, May 25.—(AP)—The Anglican communion needs no union with the papal see to maintain its catholicity, Bishop George Craig Stewart, of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Chicago said today.

"The utterance of the pope in inviting the English people to return to communion with Rome is in accordance with Rome's consistent policy of assuming that the Roman Catholic church is the whole Catholic church and that communion with the bishop of Rome is a sine qua non of catholicity," said Bishop Stewart.

"This assumptio. the Anglican communion, of which the Episcopal church in America is a part, repudiates and denies."

Intended Victim Shoots Bandit With Own Gun

Infuriated when a negro hold-up man demanded his money, H. T. Simpson, manager of a store at 491 Stonewall street, took the robber's gun away from him and shot him twice with it last night.

The bandit, who gave the name of James Jones, 22, of a Hilliard street address, was captured by police half a block away from the grocery as he attempted to escape, though seriously wounded.

Simpson said the robber came into the store and demanded his cash. When he was slow to respond, the negro snapped the pistol at Simpson. The manager then jumped on the negro, got the gun and fired twice. One bullet pierced the negro's back and the other grazed his left shoulder. Officers took him to Grady hospital under arrest.

GERMAN FLIGHTS STIR SWITZERLAND

BERNE, Switzerland, May 25.—(AP) Switzerland considered tonight protesting to Berlin against what it regards as violation of her territory by flights of German aerial squadrons over the frontier.

Authorities are awaitng the outcome of an investigation by customs officials of th planes' identities. The customs officers complained that Switzerland's territory had been violated twice this week.

Four nazi planes, they said, flew over Gottlieben and there was no question of their identity, but eight monoplanes which passed over Schaffthouse three days ago were so high their license numbers could not be read.

Only recently Switzerland protested strongly to Berlin against violation of her territory in the alleged kidnaping of Berthold Jacob, anti-nazi journalist, by Germans. Berlin agreed to submit the case to arbitration. The incident aroused much resentment here.

France recently put 12 pursuit planes on border duty after reports that nazi airplanes had flown over French fortified regions without permission.

The family of Max Graehling, French artist, said at Metz Saturday he had been arrested by German secret police on a charge of espionage while painting in the Saar. Relatives said they received no response to inquiries at the German legation.

Adolf Bauer, young German flyer, who was fined 50 francs when his plane was forced down at Avesnes, France, took off for the fatherland Saturday afternoon in his Swastika-marked plane after 48 hours' detention for landing in French territory.

3 CHINESE GIRLS, SEEKING HUSBANDS, PASS UP CHANCE

HANGCHOW, China, May 25.—(AP) Three destitute Chinese girls, coaxed into the marriage market with many others after being educated in the business of housework, are holding out for better catches.

Professors, physicians, military men, farmers, laborers, office boys, clerks and even a banker, looked over the last batch of 12 girls. Nine of the dozen moved from the classroom of the Door of Hope mission to kitchen stoves. The three—said to be the prettiest—held out.

When the mission made known some time ago that it planned to marry off the destitute girls—with their approval—it started something it couldn't stop. The institution is deluged with applications from bachelors in search of mates.

Applications from the bachelors are carefully scrutinized and the successful ones are asked to look over the girls. From this point onward, romance is permitted to take charge of the matter, under the chaperonage of the mission.

Funeral services will be conducted at 2 o'clock this afternoon at Spring Hill, Dr. Louie D. Newton officiating, and interment will be in West View cemetery. Pallbearers will be Dr. C. F. Snow, Dr. N. A. Goodyear, George P. Tiesler, J. F. Graham, C. A. Briton and W. C. Colwell.

LONG, COUGHLIN WAR URGED UPON WOMEN

WASHINGTON, May 25.—(AP)—An organized effort by women to counteract by oratory what she termed "the demagogs deliberately influencing mass sentiment" was suggested today by Grace Morrison Poole, retiring president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

"There are women speakers who could make themselves heard in our land the same as Father Coughlin and Senator Huey Long," she said.

"Women must be more active politically, must fearlessly fight if our country is not to be controlled by special interests and powerful lobbies."

PARK DELAYS DECISION ON M'ELROY KIDNAPER

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., May 25. (AP)—Governor Guy B. Park announced tonight that he will release Monday his decision as to whether Walter McGee must hang for kidnaping Mary McElroy—and in Kansas City McGee prayed long in his cell.

Announcement of the decision was planned today but an attack of indigestion confined the governor to his bed.

CAPT. EDEN, LAVAL ARE GIVEN CREDIT FOR CURBING DUCE

League Adjourns Confident of Ethiopia Peace, Settles Yugoslav-Hungarian Dispute.

GENEVA, May 25.—(AP)—Relieved at prospective settlement of an Italo-Ethiopian dispute that apparently threatened the very life of the League of Nations, delegates to the 86th session of the League council late today voted adjournment.

League circles gave credit to Captain Anthony Eden, Britain's lord privy seal, and Pierre Laval, French foreign minister, for inducing Benito Mussolini to accept arbitration of his African dispute after Il Duce had rejected, one after another, compromise proposals submitted to him.

The council also unanimously approved what was described as settlement of the months-old Yugoslav-Hungarian dispute growing out of the assassination of King Alexander of Yugoslavia at Marseilles last October. Hungary's pledge to take vigorous measures against terrorists was considered satisfactory.

Mussolini's sudden decision to let arbitrators handle his quarrel with Ethiopia sticks another feather in the already well-bedecked cap of Anthony Eden, Britain's lord privy seal.

A "coming young man" from the day he launched his political career in 1926, the 37-year-old Eden looks today to be the best bet to succeed Sir John Simon as foreign secretary when the long-predicted cabinet shakeup takes place.

At home, at Geneva, at virtually every European capital, Eden's personal charm, hard work, patience and smooth speech have served to establish him firmly as Britain's diplomatic ace.

Tall, dark, handsome moustached, one of Britain's best-dressed men, Eden has done the lion's share of his nation's continental dickering during recent years. Not only has he accompanied Simon on missions, but he has often gone alone. Notable was his recent history-making tour of eastern Europe's capitals, which brought him home tired and ill but laid the groundwork for the Italo-Anglo-French conference at Stresa.

GERMANY MOVES TO FURNISH OIL FROM OWN WELLS

BERLIN, May 25.—(AP)—A nation-wide drilling exploration of German soil to a depth of 10,000 feet was said today to have revealed oil wells "similar to those in Pennsylvania and West Virginia," expected to make the reich's army and industry free from the necessity of importing foreign lubricants.

Harry Sinclair, American oil man, gave Germany its cue. In 1930 after research work through the Hanover oil fields, Sinclair told the Germans that the region, if properly exploited, could "supply the entire domestic needs."

About 10 million marks ($4,000,000) will be spent by the nazis in this year's research campaign, to subsidize the companies drilling for oil.

German crude oil production jumped to 312,852 tons last year from 232,000 in 1933. It was hoped by the nazis that the results of this year's campaign would increase the annual production to at least 650,000 tons, with still more in succeeding years.

Phone User Locked In When Store Is Closed

Married men may appreciate the plight an unidentified Atlantan found himself in last night. According to police reports, he entered a telephone booth in Jacobs pharmacy at Five Points. It was late and possibly he was attempting to explain to a doubting lady. Police received their first information when a voice over the telephone said:

"For the love of Mike come to Jacobs pharmacy and let me out of the store. I've been talking over the phone and they closed the shop on me and went home. I'm spending my last nickel making this call."

Police found the manager and released the victim from his improvised prison. "Talk about a bird in a cage," he said as he hurried on his way.

Quintuplets' Shelter---Dionnes and Part of Family

At top is the Dafoe hospital at Callander, Ont., where the babies are sheltered. Note the outer fence, with its signs, and farther back, an eight-foot fence topped with barbed wire, to keep out the curious. Below, Oliva Dionne and his wife with their other children, the "quins" not included, of course. The children in the photograph, from left to right, are Therese, six years old; Ernest, eight; Pauline, two, in front of Ernest; Rose, seven, and Daniel, three.

By PHYLLIS GRIFFITHS.
(Copyright, 1935, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

CALLANDER, Ontario, May 25.—Oliva Dionne, his wife, Elzire, and this reporter have been calling on the Dionnes' celebrated quintuplets, who next Tuesday will be just one year old. The visitors found the babies, of course, in the nursery of the government-built Dafoe hospital.

There was something pathetic in the fact that the parents had to ring a bell and wait for a padlock to be undone before they could enter the house where their own children live.

There was still more of pathos when they stood by a glass window, separating the nursery from the reception room, just looking at their babies as at something which was theirs and yet not theirs.

After a few minutes, however, they went into another room and donned white gowns, which they are required to wear before entering the nursery. Then the father and mother walked into the nursery. The parents picked up the babies in turn, taking them over to the window to be admired, beaming upon them, and saying endearing French phrases.

But they evidently felt uncomfortable, ill at ease. And very soon they waved "au 'voir" to the unmindful little ones, and the gate, upon which a sign states: "No admission to Dionne quintuplets," closed behind them.

Mother "Not Welcome."

"I don't feel I am welcome there," said Mrs. Dionne in French.

Certainly no one had done anything to make the parents feel at home. A policeman, posted at the entrance, was courteous, but there was no exchange of pleasantries and none of the nurses had put in an appearance. Furthermore, the policeman, although as discreet about it as possible, is obviously charged with keeping an eye on the father and mother, just as on any other visitors, when they are on the premises.

Mr. and Mrs. Dionne want more say in their babies' rearing. They do not want to remove them from the hospital, nor to endanger their health through promoters' schemes, but they say: "Those are our babies. We are capable of making decisions about them and their contracts. Why should the government carry on a policy of interference?"

Managers' Contracts.

Oliva Dionne has two managers—Leo Kervin, who runs a summer tourist business in Callander, and Oliva's brother, Leon. Each is entitled to 20 per cent of the parents' earnings, but Kervin is liable for one-third of the Dionne family's expenses. The managers are particularly bitter over what they term "affronts" to Mr. and Mrs. Dionne, and the parents' relations with the physician who brought the quins into the world, little Dr. Roy Dafoe, are, to say the least, strained.

"He has had too much credit," says the father of the five.

"C'est vrai," confirms the mother of the five.

"The parents haven't had a square deal," says Kervin. "They are not stupid, as they have been made out to be, but ordinary country people who don't like having their children taken away from them. Granted, they needed help at first, but it was forthcoming from all quarters. The government didn't have to step in to break that Chicago contract for the showing of the babies. It wasn't valid anyway. Mrs. Dionne hadn't signed it, and anyhow it required Dr. Dafoe's permission. All he had to do was to refuse it.

"And this last bill appointing new guardians was unnecessary. We don't want to injure the babies' health. In fact we wouldn't stand for some of the things that are going on now—such as taking dozens of flashlight pictures when the babies are sick and running high temperatures."

Credit Discounted.

And Leon Dionne says Dr. Dafoe was slow in answering his brother's summons a year ago, that three of the babies were born before Dr. Dafoe arrived, that more credit is due two midwives who were present than to the physician, and that the Red Cross and the nurses were responsible for the quintuplets' surviving the next few months.

To all of which Dr. Dafoe replies nothing at all.

"Why should I get into a dog fight?" queries the short, smiling medico, who will be 52 the day after the quins are a year old. "No, no, I have nothing to say about those things."

The man in whose waiting-room hangs a membership certificate from "Canada's Baby Conservation Association Incorporated—Give a Thought to the Babies," confesses "feeling tired after a year of it."

"My other practice is kind of wrecked," says he, lifting a whimsical eyebrow.

Dr. Dafoe states that the quintuplets are in normal health for year-old babies—perhaps a bit ahead of the ordinary child, due to the extra medical and nursing care they have had.

Perfect Babies.

"Each of the five is perfect," he observed. "But if they didn't get special attention, they would go to pieces. I want to emphasize that." With an expressive wink. "They are dandy babies. I like 'em all. Haven't a favorite."

The weights of the Dionne babies at the age of one week and today are as follows:

Yvonne, weight when week old, 2 pounds, 6 1-4 ounces; today, 17 pounds, 9 ounces.

Annette, weight when week old, 2 pounds, 4 ounces; today, 17 pounds, 10 ounces.

Cecile, weight when week old, 2 pounds, 1 ounce; today, 17 pounds, 8 ounces.

Marie, weight when week old, 1 pound, 10 ounces; today, 15 pounds, 1 1-2 ounces.

Totals: Weight when week old, 10 pounds, 2 1-4 ounces; today, 83 pounds, 14 1-2 ounces.

Dr. Dafoe insists that Mr. and Mrs. Dionne are "welcome at the hospital at any time."

"I have asked the mother to come over and help with the nursing and feeding, but she won't. They can handle the babies if they want."

And how has fame left Dr. Dafoe? "Am I famous?" he laughs. "Guess I've been too busy to notice. I know I get plenty of mail," with a wave of his hand toward a stack of letters. "All those need answering. I used to get some telling me the children should go back to their mother, but there aren't so many of them now. A few letters abuse me. A good many don't. And they're all interesting."

Dr. Dafoe chuckles heartily.

"I get some of these French-Canadian farmers in to see me when their wives are having babies. They say: 'Will she have one, two t'ree, four, five?'"

Parents' Position.

Dr. Dafoe believes Mr. and Mrs. Dionne have refused their government's offer to build them a modern home because they think it embarrasses the government to see a poor home across the road from the hospital."

"They are getting $100 a month, and they have a new car," remarked the doctor. "What more do they want? They would be unhappy anywhere else. He has a hired man now, and she has a hired girl to help in the house."

And is Dr. Dafoe still Mrs. Dionne's medical adviser?

"I haven't been called in since the babies were moved to the hospital," he said. "I don't know whether she would have me again or not, probably not."

Mrs. Dionne reiterated earlier denials that she was shortly to become a mother again.

"Non, non," she said. And then added, as she has done before, the French equivalent of: "I'm having no more babies for the government."

Other Dionne Children.

Rocking slowly by the stove in the large, spotlessly clean living room of the Dionne house, Mrs. Dionne was surrounded by her other children, Pauline, who will be 2 in June; Ernest, 8; Rose, 7; Therese, 6; Daniel 3.

Mrs. Dionne, sombre in manner, her young face pallid, says she is not well.

"I feel tired all the time," she said. "I am sick because I am worried. I want my babies."

Her husband, thin and intent, raised a dark head. "Yes, we want our babies," he said, "and what belongs to them."

They walked to the gate to bid me goodbye. Their eyes turned toward the hospital.

"Sometimes, on a still night, I can hear my babies crying," said Mrs. Dionne.

Problem or no problem, the fledgling quintuplets are healthy, happy specimens. By special permission of Dr. Dafoe, this reporter saw them at breakfast on a visit without the parents, and no woman could see them without falling in love with them.

The policeman on duty says: "Ye-e-s—they're cute, but I don't think I'll ever marry. I liked looking at them for the first week, but it shows me how much work a baby makes—and do I get tired of listening to people raving about 'em! Thank goodness I'm being relieved soon."

Busy Day for Babies.

The quintuplets' day begins at six, when they have cod liver oil and orange juice. Bathed and dressed, they sit in their cream-colored high chairs for their real breakfast of coddled eggs and glasses of milk at 7:30. Mme. De Kerline, head nurse, and Miss Yvonne Leroux, the other nurse, each spoon-feeds one at a time, and then brush their teeth with tiny toothbrushes, a special color for each. Diapers are the next order of the day, and inexperienced mothers would marvel at the speed and neatness with which they go on.

The babies eat with dispatch. "They learned early not to poke about eating, for we just took their food away when enough time had elapsed," explained Mme. de Kerline.

In their roomy play pens, they perform great feats with their sturdy legs, kick each other with gurgling pleasure, and generally use up all the energy they can before they are dressed in warm pink chinchilla coats and bonnets, and their rosy faces protected with cream, for their morning sleep on the front verandah.

One by one, the nurses wheel in five identical fawn-colored carriages. Yvonne—impish Yvonne, the heavyweight of the quintuplets—went reluctantly the day of this visit: she was having such fun kicking Annette. Placid Annette, who had paid no attention to her big sister's flailing heels, went philosophically; it was time for a nap. Cecile, Emilie, Marie followed peaceably; there wasn't a whimper out of the bunch.

"Well, ladies," said Mme. de Kerline, "sleep tight."

And the quins were left in the sunshine, while windows of the cream and green nursery were thrown wide open, so that fresh air whisked into every corner, and around the five cribs, tied with different colored bows to match the blankets on the carriages, and the three play pens, and the tables on which they were laid to be dressed. Another attendant emptied the largest laundry basket I have ever seen—and the nurses left her to clean the nursery while they sat down in the comfortable reception room for a cigaret and a chat.

"Aren't they beautiful babies?" said Mme. de Kerline. "Yvonne and I love them. They are so very good—because they are healthy."

A tour of the hospital showed a big laundry cellar—the quins' and nurses' washing fills 400 feet of line twice every other day—pleasant living and sleeping quarters for the staff; a bathroom into which water is electrically pumped from a well; a loft in which are stored the incubator which housed the puny bits of humanity a twelve-month ago, and their first wee cribs; and four cupboards crammed with gifts to the quins, wearing apparel and toys from all over the continent.

"Look at this," said the head nurse, holding up a little silk sun suit, one of those backless things with straps to go over the shoulder. "Won't this be grand for summer days? The woman who sent this has promised 10 altogether. The babies will get a tan with them on."

In the hall hung a framed poem, "Little Ladies—Happy Birthday," which someone had sent a little ahead of time. It began:

"O what we would not give to set
Our eyes on each dear, brown-eyed pet,
Yvonne, Cecile, Marie, Annette
And Emilie—age one today.
This unique twenty-eighth of May."

POPULACE IS TOLD TO BE SKEPTICAL OF PEACE PARLEY

Italy Ready To 'Assume Supreme Responsibility' in Africa, He Warns. Calls 20,000 More to Arms.

ROME, May 25.—(AP)—Orders for the mobilization of thousands of officers and technical experts of the class of 1912 tonight followed Benito Mussolini's assertion before the chamber of deputies that Italy "is ready to assume all, even the supreme, responsibility" in east Africa.

Military sources estimated unofficially the mobilization order would affect upward of 20,000 trained subalterns and technicians.

Counseling his people not to cherish too many illusions about conciliation of the Italo-Ethiopian controversy, he declared only enemies of fascist Italy "can pretend to be stupefied or simulate protests for military measures which we have taken or for those which we shall take."

The premier, mapping the course of European events during recent months, said only one problem—Austria—stands between Italy and Germany.

Repudiation View.

Germany's unilateral repudiation of the armament clauses of the Versailles treaty, even though it "suddenly cut in two" the "normal development of the European situation," he dismissed with this phrase:

"To make recriminations is useless, even as it is useless to speak again of disarmament."

"It is extremely difficult," he continued, "for us to believe in the possibility of the limitation of armaments or in the prohibition of some methods of warfare.

"Nevertheless, if something concrete could be done it is not from our side that difficulties would be interposed."

While he declared the Italo-Franco-British solidarity achieved at the Stresa conference in May "effective, constant and omnipresent" Il Duce directed several keen shafts at European critics of his east African policy, among them France and England.

(French and British pressure at Geneva Friday was credited with inducing Mussolini to accept arbitration of the dispute.)

The attitudes of individual states on the issue, he told the deputies, "will offer the occasion for demonstrating to us their concrete and not only superficial and verbose friendship."

Year's Developments.

While devoting most of his attention to the Ethiopian situation, Mussolini reviewed the foreign political field in general, citing these important developments since the first of the year:

1. The Franco-Italian accords of January, which he said "can be considered satisfactory" since they "created premises of effective collaboration between the two countries."

2. The Franco-British conference at London in February, a "projection of the Franco-Italian one in Rome," which "fixed some fundamental points in regard to the political reconstruction of Europe."

3. Germany's unilateral denunciation of part five of the Versailles treaty, whereby "the world was placed before an accomplished fact . . . annotated by there diplomatic protests . . . (which) was not revokable."

4. The conference at Stresa in April which "was sufficiently conclusive, inasmuch as it determined, in the face of some urgent problems, the unified position of three western powers."

5. Decision to convoke another conference "to face the problems of the Danubian basin," which "cannot be held at the beginning of June, as announced," and "will not be convoked before it shall have been very, very diligently prepared."

Germany will be invited to that conference, Il Duce said, and will be kept posted on the successive phases of preparations.

6. The Franco-Russian and Russo-Czechoslovak mutual assistance pacts, which "shifted the equilibrium of forces."

7. Hitler's speech before the German reichstag. His "thirteen points cannot either be accepted or rejected as a whole." Mussolini said, but "the preferable method is to clarify and sound them out."

REICH-ITALIAN ACCORD SOUGHT IN ETHIOPIAN TILT

(Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.)

BERLIN, May 25.—Benito Mussolini's chagrin at British and French interference in his controversy with Ethiopia today stirred hopes in official German circles that the old Italo-German friendship might yet be restored.

German diplomacy was described as feverishly busy trying to re-establish the understanding between Mussolini and Adolf Hitler which seemingly received its death blow when Austrian nazis assassinated Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss last July.

So elated were reich officials over recent developments that one high authority said flatly "the old cordial relations with Italy will soon be reestablished."

Hitler himself held out an olive branch to Rome in his reichstag speech Tuesday.

"Germany," he said, "neither intends nor wishes to interfere in the internal affairs of Anstria, annex Austria or conclude 'anschluss' (economic union) . . . The German government regrets the tension which has arisen from conflict with Austria all the more because it resulted in disturbing our formerly so good relations with Italy, a state with which we otherwise have no conflict of interest."

(Addressing the Italian chamber of deputies Saturday, Mussolini said only one problem, Austria, stood between Italy and Germany.)

Hitler's overture was followed by extended conferences at Rome and Vienna in which Ulrich Von Hassell, the German ambassador to Italy, and Franz Von Papen, minister to Austria, talked things over with Italian and Austrian officials.

CAMPAIGN TO PROVIDE LIBRARY FOR JOBLESS

"Book Week for Unemployed" To Be Oberved Here June 1 to 8.

"Atlanta Book Week for the Unemployed" will be observed June 1 to 8, when an intensive campaign to obtain books for unemployed persons here and throughout the state who do not have access to a library will be conducted by a group of outstanding librarians and prominent Atlanta citizens.

The committee in charge of the campaign is composed of Miss Beverly Wheatcroft, State Library Association president; Miss Jessie Hopkins, librarian, Carnegie library; Miss Miriam D. Tompkins, associate professor of book selection, Emory University library school; Miss Edna Ruth Hanley, librarian, Agnes Scott College; Kendall Weisiger, of the Southern Bell Telephone Company; W. A. Dobson, Scout executive, Atlanta council, Boy Scouts of America; Dr. C. R. Stauffer, pastor of the First Christian church; Mrs. D. R. Longino, president Atlanta Council P.-T. A.; Miss Lucille Cannon, executive secretary of the Girl Scouts; Miss Eva Hancock, executive secretary of Camp Fire Girls; Hal C. Brown, professor of English, Georgia School of Technology; E. E. Whittaker, manager of the Fox theater, and the following prominent Atlantans: Dr. Aubrey Hess, Mrs. Sinclair Jacobs, Mrs. E. K Large, Mrs. Edgar Neely, Mrs. Arthur I. Harris, Mrs. Nellie Nix Edwards and Mrs. R. Murdoch Walker.

Books collected in the drive will supply libraries for unemployed persons in Atlanta, rural industrial communities, and reading rooms for unemployed persons throughout the state. Every Atlanta citizen will be asked to donate at least one volume and a collection program is being worked out so that donated books can be collected.

It is the desire of the committee to obtain wholesome, inspirational books, both fiction and nonfiction. Such books will provide leisure-hour entertainment for the unemployed and will also furnish inspiration for potential jobs, it was pointed out.

The books donated will form the nucleus of an extension library service throughout the state. A recent report of the American Library Association revealed that 71 per cent, or 2,079,793 of the people of Georgia are without library service of any kind, except for a limited mail service.

VETS ACCLAIM HUEY AS HE RETURNS HOME

BATON ROUGE, La., May 25.—(AP)—Unscarred by his wordy battle in Washington in which he fought the Roosevelt administration on the veto of the soldiers' bonus, Senator Huey P. Long returned to Louisiana today and resumed his fight for lower public utility rates at hearings in his militia-ruled "Little District of Columbia."

They gave Long a rousing reception at the station and the officers and the crowd paraded the senator afoot up Canal street from the railroad station to the Roosevelt hotel, where he entered an automobile and came to Baton Rouge by highway.

When he arrived in Baton Rouge protestors against continuance of martial law placed hopes in reports emanating from official circles that the military proclamation of January 25, issued by Governor O. K. Allen, Long's political ally, would be rescinded and martial rejn revoked.

When asked about the report Long commented: "I understand it's about over."

Governor Allen called out the troops for Long four months ago when armed citizens rose against his political control and Long charged that a group of citizens had plotted to waylay and murder him.

The senator spent most of the morning in district court before Judge W. Carruth Jones arguing against the appeal of the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company from lower service rates put into effect by the Louisiana Public Service Commission. The case was continued to August 8.

The next case on docket was a resumption of the Public Service Commission hearing on rate reductions for electricity in New Orleans, the city whose administration Long is striving to seize from his political enemy, Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley.

U. S. NARCOTIC FARM DEDICATED IN KY.

LEXINGTON, Ky., May 25.—(AP)—Surgeon General Hugh S. Cumming, of the United States Public Health Service, today dedicated Lexington's newly completed federal narcotic farm to "instinctive demands" of the people "that the sick and afflicted shall be set in the way of strength and hope."

The surgeon general described the $4,000,000 institution for the care of drug addicts as a center of treatment, education, industry and rehabilitation.

The plant, with all the facilities of a modern city to make itself sustaining, covers 11 acres in the center of a rich farm area of 1,100 acres in the Blue Grass country. Construction has required three years. A companion institution is being erected at Fort Worth, Texas.

The plant has facilities to care for 1,400 inmates. The farm staff will number 350 employes who will receive an annual pay roll of approximately $500,000. Upkeep of the farm is estimated at $750,000 a year.

$685,000 Set for Augusta and $200,000 Slated for Brunswick.

By GLADSTONE WILLIAMS.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—Georgia is listed for liberal participation in the expenditure of a special allotment of works relief funds aggregating more than $100,000,000 which officials of the War Department and Public Health Service today sought in applications filed with the new works relief administration.

Director Frank Walker, of the division of applications, announced that the army corps of engineers have received $685,000, for protecting the city of Augusta from floods and $200,000 for dredging Brunswick harbor, making a total of $885,000 that will be spent in Georgia on these two projects alone. In addition the Public Health Service of the Treasury Department has asked for $18,000 for the construction of a quarantine vessel at Savannah.

The balance of the fund has been applied for by the Public Health Service for malaria control by draining swamps and ponds in Georgia, and 15 other southern states, and for the continuation of community sanitation program on rural and semi-rural sections of Georgia and 33 other states.

For malaria control $88,317,936 is asked, and for continuation of community sanitation program $43,755,600.

Georgia may also share in $150,000 requested by the Bureau of Plant Industry for solving problems in tree disease control.

Also, the procurement division of the Treasury Department has requested $530,784 for the decoration of 1900 existing federal buildings and 400 more in course of construction, by artists and sculptors, in which Georgia may share.

Quints' Squeals and Coos To Go Over Radio Chains

NEW YORK, May 25.—(UP)—The tiny voices of the world's five most famous babies—the Dionne quintuplets—will be heard from border to border and coast to coast on their first birthday, Tuesday, May 28, it was learned today.

From the little Dafoe hospital in Callender, Ont., the Canadian Radio Commission, government-controlled broadcasting chain in Canada, will pick up the voices of the infants and transmit them throughout the dominion.

For the United States both the National and Columbia Broadcasting Systems will have nation-wide hookups between 5 and 5:30 p. m. (Atlanta time).

Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe and another guardian, and several of the nurses who have attended the "quints" from the start, will speak, and the babies themselves—it is hoped—will treat the radio audience to a few of their choicest squeals and coos.

GOODYEAR'S G-3 TIRES SHOW GREAT RECORDS

If you see Atlanta's detective chief mysteriously interviewing motorists on the streets, in garages, on the courts of Goodyear service stores, you will know it is part of an effort to get the whole story about the performance of the G-3 tires, an investigation which is proving, according to reports now being published, that these tires, first featured in Atlanta a year ago, are proving better in service than the predictions made by the Goodyear engineers.

"We didn't doubt Goodyear," said Jack Kelly, manager of Goodyear Servive, "but naturally their figures on tire performance must be averaged for the nation as a whole. We were promised, and in turn promised the customers of our six stores in Greater Atlanta, 43 per cent longer non-skid wear than even Goodyear had ever given them before.

"When a year had gone by, we wanted to know whether this new, flatter, broader tread was giving the extra safety we all expected of it. The only way to find out was to ask drivers.

"Well, we asked them, and their stories seemed almost too good to be true. They gave us figures of 50 per cent, 55 per cent, 60 per cent and 70 per cent longer non-skid mileage. But these were regular customers, good friends—and maybe they were being nice. We couldn't afford to go along with any doubts about such.

Sent Out Chief.

"So we asked Chief of Detectives A. Lamar Poole, head of Atlanta's truth-finding, man-hunting organization, if he would undertake to run down the real facts as the famous Inspector Faurot had done nationally for Goodyear. And we sent along with him, to report conditions exactly as they were, Leo Farrell, ace reporter with a reputation for accurate and concise writing.

"Their findings are being published as rapidly as they come in, and the reports indicate that Goodyear engineers were ultra-conservative in their predictions of G-3 performance. In the hands of Atlanta drivers, Goodyear G-3 tires are performing far beyond the 43 per cent non-skid mileage promised for them, are making life-long friends for Goodyear.

"The investigation has turned up some astonishing mileage figures. One man, for instance, is on his second set of tires within the year. The first G-3's took him 27,000 miles over roads so bad that the gravel has dented his fenders into thousands of tiny lumps. The second set has 15,000 of the same hard miles back of it, yet the tread is clear and sharp, good for many more thousands of miles of non-skid safety.

Tough Going.

"A milk-route operator was turned up just the other day who insists that G-3 tires are giving him 10 times the service. As you may know, a milk-rout truck measures its tire year in days, not miles—because of the nature of the load they must carry. It is a remarkable testimonial to G-3's famous supertwist body, as well as the great new tread with its two additional pounds of rubber, that it shows up in this astonishing fashion on such exceptionally tough going."

At the request of drivers, Goodyear service stores are making "footprints" of G-3 tires as they come in, following out the practice begun by Inspector Faurot and Chief Poole, so that a permanent record may be kept on display of the tread-pattern showing after many miles of service. The facts about the car, the mileage, and other details are incorporated with the "footprints" and the owner is asked to sign the sheet as witness to the facts.

2 SCOTTSBORO NEGROES SEEK WRIT RELEASE

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 25.—(AP)—An effort to obtain release on bail of two of nine negro defendants in the Scottsboro case today had been launched, with filing of habeas corpus petitions in Morgan circuit court which were set down for hearing on May 31.

C. B. Powell, Birmingham attorney, submitted copies of the petitions and orders for the hearing to Attorney-General A. A. Carmichael, who said they would be given to Lieutenant Governor Thomas E. Knight Jr., retained by the state as special prosecutor.

The petitions were brought in behalf of Willie Roberson and Olen Montgomery in the name of Osmond K. Fraenkel, of New York, retained in the case by the International Labor Defense as counsel.

We'll Swap Louisiana for Debt, U. S. Tells France in Josh Edition

NEW YORK, May 25.—(UP)—Wall Street had its fun today with a jocular proposal that France take back Louisiana in return for cancellation of the war debt.

The jesting offer was purportedly made to Premier Flandin by President Roosevelt, who admitted that in making the Louisiana purchase America had bitten off more than she could chew.

"Dear Pete," the communique begins, and that should give you as good an idea as any that the annual Bawl Street Journal, hilarious publication of the Bond Club of New York, has once more made its welcome appearance.

The Lampoon, in which Wall Street pokes fun at itself and the rest of the nation, came out in connection with the financiers' annual outing.

No "Hooey" to It.

The Louisiana offer, to which the president assures Premier Flandin there is no "Hooey."

An interview with jovial ex-President Hoover, en route east to "do $50 worth of thinking" for an insurance company of which he's a director.

A rollicking assortment of humorous advertisements, of which this one—over the name of J. P. Morgan & Co.—was typical: "We own and offer for sale old masters, miniatures, yachts, real estate. No reasonable bid accepted."

Ad for Hoover.

"Prominent executive available. Mature leader, former chief executive of great American corporation, desires profitable connection. Severed relations in 1932 because of disagreement with stockholders regarding management and company policies. Would be interested in returning to old position if co-operation supplied. Salary desired—$75,000 with room and board. Interested parties will address, Box 13, Palo Alto, Cal."

In his offer to France, President Roosevelt asserts:

"Take back Louisiana and we'll forgive anything, including the war debt. . .

"It is a grand state but, frankly, in recent years it has been more of a nuisance than an asset. As a state it is just e pluribus unum, as we say over here, and we can get along without it. . .

"The state is rich in piscatorial life, including the pisces kingfish and the pisces crawfish. The kingfish species, particularly, has flourished in the bayous and the prize-winning Louisiana specimen has been in demand for exhibition at the leading Atlantic fishing ports, including Washington and Sands Point. . ."

Special Stamp

If the deal goes through, the president whispers it will be commemorated by a special "Louisiana severance" stamp issue.

"It is the custom," he confides, "of our postmaster general to run off a few sheets of all stamp issues, imperforate and ungummed, for private distribution, and there should be no difficulty about reserving several for you to cement our mutual friendship."

Ads from securities houses proclaimed: "Stocks and bonds; as good as your checks"—"get your governments before your government gets you."

The New York Central raidroad's purported advertisement read: "We couldn't open the windows, so we air-conditioned the trains."

A Fifth avenue tailor advertised: "For years we have been exclusive tailors to gentlemen. We wish to announce we will also serve brokers and bondmen."

One brokerage firm's ad asked: "Did you like Tarzan? Visit our trading department and see real gorillas at work."

Another: "Office boy wanted, salary $16 a week, or full partnership."

Big headlines chronicled the news that the Chase National Bank "will shortly institute a plan whereby collateral loans will be made."

Richard Bonelli Sings Over WGST Howard Barlow Directs Symphony

'NationalAmateurNight,' "Gulf Headliners," "Rhythm at 8" Are Listed Today.

Richard Bonelli, singing with the Ford Symphony orchestra; Will Rogers, as star of the Gulf Headliners, and Ethel Merman, in "Rhythm at 8," are among the famous stars to be heard over WGST today.

In addition to these outstanding personalities, Ray Perkins will direct another session of "National Amateur Night." Fray and Braggiotti will be heard again in their two-piano novelties.

FORD HOUR.

Richard Bonelli, brilliant young baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will make his second appearance as guest soloist of the Ford Sunday Evening hour tonight. The program, which features also the music of the Ford Symphony orchestra and chorus, under Victor Kolar's direction, is broadcast from 8 to 9 o'clock, over WGST.

With the exception of three members of the quartet presented in the Easter program, Mr. Bonelli is the first artist to make a second appearance in the series. His brilliant season this year, with the Metropolitan, in New York; his nation-wide popularity as a result of numerous guest appearances with other organizations, and the fine impression he made in his first Ford Sunday evening hour appearance all led to his re-engagement.

The program follows: Overture, "Hansel and Gretel," (Humperdinck)—orchestra; "Eri Tu—the Masked Ball" (Verdi)—Mr. Bonelli, orchestra and chorus; "Danse Macabre" (Saint-Saens)—Mr. Bonelli, orchestra and chorus; finale "Fourth Symphony" (Tschaikowsky) — orchestra; selections, "Chimes of Normandy" (Planquette)—orchestra and chorus; "Brindisi" from "Hamlet" (Thomas)—Mr. Bonelli, orchestra and chorus; "Through the Years" (Youmans)—Mr. Bonelli and orchestra; "Tally-Ho" (Leone)—Mr. Bonelli and orchestra; "Danse Piemontese" (Sinigaglia)—orchestra; "O, God of Bethel" (Glaser)—chorus and organ.

NATIONAL AMATEUR NIGHT.

A vocal octet of negro Boy Scouts from troop No. 16, New Rochelle, N. Y., will compete with three vocal soloists, a banjo player, an impersanator, and an imitator of musical instruments in the weekly National Amateur Night broadcast, over WGST tonight from 5 to 5:30 o'clock.

With Ray Perkins as master of ceremonies, the amateur performers will present a variety musical program ranging from jazz to popular and classical music, supplemented by the performances of the impersonator and the instrumental imitator. Arnold Johnson's orchestra will present a solo number and provide the accompaniments.

"SYMPHONIC HOUR."

In memory of Paul Dukas, the eminent French composer who died in Paris recently, Howard Barlow will offer a special performance of Dukas' most famous composition, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," during the "Symphonic Hour," on WGST today, from 2 to 3 o'clock.

As an introduction to his program, Barlow will discuss Dukas and his music, particularly in relation to the remarkable popularity enjoyed by "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," a descriptive tone-poem which relates in vivid and ingenious music the unexpected adventures of a young apprentice left to his own devices amid the magic formulas and apparatus of his master's workshop. Dukas, born in Paris in 1865 and trained at the Paris Conservatory, where he later taught as a professor, exerted impressive influence on many currents of modern French music. He composed several ballets and major works for orchestra. Among his best known are the ballet "La Peri," the opera, "Ariane et Barbe-Bleu," and the overture to "King Lear."

GULF HEADLINERS.

Hallie Stiles, operatic soprano, will be heard again with Will Rogers in the Headliners' program over WGST from 7:30 to 8 o'clock tonight.

This will be the second of four weekly broadcast for Rogers in addition to his former contract series. Miss Stiles, formerly of the Opera Comique of Paris and the Chicago Civic Opera Company, is heard in a continuous weekly engagement. Frank Tours' orchestra will be heard during the same program.

Rogers was induced to continue four more weeks by listeners who requested that he continue until congress adjourns, that he might air his many political views. Many have asked also that he continue to presenting new plans for the relief of the unemployed.

"RHYTHM AT 8."

Dramatic sketches built around the hit tunes, "Life Is a Song" and "Night and Day," will be featured by Ethel Merman during her "Rhythm at 8" over WGST tonight from 7 to 7:30 o'clock. Miss Merman will again be supported in the song sketches by Ned Wever and a distinguished cast of CBS players, with Al Goodman and his orchestra supplying the instrumental background for her vocal offerings. Ted Husing also is featured on the half-hour program.

FRAY AND BRAGGIOTTI.

A varied program of special arrangements of numbers by George Gershwin, Richard Wagner and Cole Porter will be broadcast by Jacques Fray and Mario Braggiotti over WGST tonight from 9:30 to 9:45 o'clock. The two pianists will open their concert with Gershwin's "S'Wonderful" and the famous "Rhapsody in Blue," followed by Wagner's melody, "To the Evening Star" from "Tannhauser," and Porter's hit, "I Get a Kick Out of You" from the musical success, "Anything Goes."

"THEATER OF ROMANCE"

A pair of short stories by two of America's most popular fiction writers, Achmed Abdullah and Peter B. Kyne, will be dramatized in the "Theater of Romance" during this week on Tuesday and Thursday at 10 o'clock over WSB.

Abdullah makes his third appearance in this series with "Tropical Interlude," a study of a man whose reputation for bravery is accidental. The plot hinges upon his devotion to a woman who only pretends to love him.

Peter B. Kyne's story is "Without Benefit of July"—a chronicle of Tip McGonnigle, of the "70 Ranch," who comes to Chicago with a carload of cattle and picks up the trail of the man who murdered his brother, two years earlier.

This program is broadcast by electrical transcription.

Y. W. C. A. SINGERS.

Y. W. C. A. singers, under the direction of Mrs. Grace L. Townsend, will present a musical program over WGST at 5:30 o'clock this afternoon. Miss Sara McKinney, president of the S. O. S. Club and leader on the Y. membership committee, will give a brief talk, correlating membership with Y. activities.

RICHARD BONELLI.

Dale Stone, at the Fox theater organ, is heard over WSB every day except Saturday and Sunday in a program of popular melodies at 11:45 o'clock. The program is made up entirely from request.

Shoes Bought With Blood Stolen From Samaritan

NEW YORK, May 25.—(AP)—Mike Carr, 30, of the Seamen's Church Institute, sold blood in a transfusion today for enough money to buy a new pair of shoes.

Emerging happily from the store wearing his new footgear, he sauntered toward the East river and arrived just in time to see Thomas Ryan, 60, also of the Seamen's Church Institute, floundering in the water.

Carr removed his new shoes and placed them neatly on the pier before he dived to the rescue. When he came back the shoes were gone.

Teacher, To Be Fired, Gets Pay Hike by Ruse

OSCEOLA, Mo., May 15.—(AP)—Cleo Cauthon, a $50-a-month schoolteacher heard he was to be replaced at the Burgess school by another teacher at $30 a month. He did some fast thinking.

Then he suggested to the school board that the 40-cent school levy be cut in half and that he receive for a salary whatever the levy brought in. Now the school board, which accepted the suggestion, has learned how smart Cauthon was. He's drawing between $60 and $70 monthly.

PAINT DEALERS HEAR TALK BY E. T. TRIGG

Ernest T. Trigg, president, National Paint, Varnish & Lacquer Association, who addressed 45 paint dealers at the Atlanta Athletic Club Friday, said the paint industry is very optimistic.

Sales in 1934 showed an increase of 28 per cent over 1933 and 40 per cent over 1932, which was the low point.

"So far this year we are running about 20 per cent ahead of the same period a year ago and the current volume is less than 25 per cent below 1929 which was the peak year," he said.

"Practically all of the homes on which the Home Owners' Loan Corporation have taken over mortgages required reconditioning and that has meant a lot of business for our industry. In addition, our industry has already benefited by the National Housing Act and we anticipate greater benefit as the purposes of the act are better understood and the property owners take more advantage of it. There is every evidence that the country is on the threshold of a very active home building program.

"It is estimated that the national building program is from three to five million homes behind.

"The provisions of the National Housing Act to assist in the building of homes are the greatest things that could have happened for the benefit of the small home owners.

"Already thousands of such homes are being planned and our industry is anticipating a very definite and substantial development of this business as a result."

OCALA, Fla., May 25.—(AP)—Plans are being laid to establish a camp on some lake in Marion county this summer to give a three-week outing to 200 boys and 200 girls of families on relief rolls in District 3 of the FERA, Administrator R. E. McDonald said today.

Talmadge Will Make Radio 'Fireside Chats'

Governor Talmadge will emulate the style of President Roosevelt in his famous "fireside chats" over the radio starting Monday when the governor will begin a series of radio talks over WJTL, Atlanta; WKEU, Griffin, and other state radio stations, with the addresses emanating from the governor's office.

The initial program will be broadcast at 11 o'clock Monday for a half hour and present plans call for two broadcasts weekly. The program will be picked up by WKEU from WJTL and rebroadcast. Other state stations are expected to join the "chain," it was said.

The microphone will be on the governor's desk at the state capitol. "There won't be any other state officials talking over this microphone," the governor said. "When there is to be any talking done over it, I'll do it."

Mayor Key Deaf To Suggestion That He Run for Governor in 1936

Mayor Key yesterday turned a deaf ear, at least temporarily, to a bid for a gubernatorial campaign in 1936 to direct his efforts toward opening of liquor stores in Atlanta.

John F. Scott, head of the Macon Progressive League, composed of about 500 citizens, asked Key to make himself available as a candidate in 1936, and promised support which would "enable you to sweep the state."

"I'm not a candidate for governor, at least not now," Key said. "I've got work to do here.

"This local liquor control situation is not settled. I want those 10,000 signatures from Atlantans on the supplementary lists by June 3 so council will let citizens of this community speak for themselves about opening municipal dispensaries."

The mayor's office was kept busy Saturday passing out petition blanks. More than 500 signatures already were on file in the office.

To Reopen Battle.

Key and Councilman Howard C. McCutcheon, liquor store floor leader in council, plan to reopen their battle to force council to allow Atlantans to vote on whether they want Key to run the stores at the June 3 meeting.

They will demand that council accede to the demands of local citizens and set a date for the referendum on an ordinance to empower Key to run the dispensaries and put all profits in the city treasury.

"There'll be a lot of talk among council members, who have voted against letting the people settle this issue as they have asked to do, about replacing salary cuts imposed on city employes," Key said. "They know the city has not the money to do that. If the liquor stores were in operation we could do something about it.

Salaries Involved.

"These political demagogues and poppycock dispensers, however, will get up and make a big play for support of city employes by insisting that salary cuts be relaced and at the same time will vote to choke off a vote on the liquor store, the only available means we have of getting any extra money for anything.

"I am not positive this will happen but I rather suspect it will. It always has. Those same members of council who have been most vociferous in their opposition to the liquor store will be the loudest in their yell for replacement of salaries for employes. They don't care where the money is coming from. All they want is votes.

"They are willing to appropriate it out of thin air and will be bewildered when the phantom anticipations they make fail to materialize, or they will gouge taxpayers further to insure their re-election.

Won't Play Politics.

"I don't play politics with other people's money. I never have and never will. I want to get money from that liquor store to pay decent salaries to deserving employes and I want to reduce the tax burdens under which Atlantans are suffering.

"Another good thing this liquor store will do is to provide a better plan for control of local sales. I think the citizens of Atlanta know what they want in this respect and I would not be willing to do as many members of council have done—block a free public expression on this or any other controversial subject."

PLANS COMPLETED FOR POPPY SALES NEXT THURSDAY

Three hundred volunteers will be stationed in Atlanta's streets Thursday for the fourteenth annual sale of Buddy Poppies, which will be conducted under the auspices of the Greater Atlanta Post No. 390 and Marcus W. Beck, Jr., Post No. 3027, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The Buddy Poppy distribution, an annual event in Atlanta, is held in conjunction with similar sales conducted by approximately 3,000 other V. F. W. posts throughout the country. Proceeds are used for the maintenance and expansion of the V. F. W. national home at Eaton Rapids, Mich., and for the service and liaison available to local veterans in need of hospitalization or compensation.

Atlantans who purchase the little red flowers, according to Mrs. J. C. Mellichamp, general chairman are assured they will receive the original Buddy Poppy, made by disabled veterans and copyrighted at Washington. The sales, she said, provide thousands of disabled service men with small amounts of pocket money they can earn in no other way.

W. F. Moore has been named chairman of the poppy sale for Post No. 390 by Commander Whidden, and Commander Vandiver of Post No. 3027 has named S. C. Talton chairman.

The volunteer workers, stationed at strategic points over the city Thursday, will be equipped with credentials, Mrs. Mellichamp stated.

EVIDENCE AGAINST ROSS TOBEGIVEN GRAND JURY

Evidence against the "fashion plate" bandit who Thursday night was captured after a running gun battle with county police officers following his holdup of 15 persons in Coursey's Pharmacy, at 2305 Peachtree road, will be presented to the grand jury Tuesday, it was announced yesterday by the solicitor-general's office.

In the meantime, the federal identification bureau will be asked to assist in the identification of the wounded man, who insists that his name is William Ross and that he is an unemployed embalmer. Discharge papers found on his person led police to believe that he might be William H. Fowler, a seaman, who was discharged at Mobile, Ala., on April 9.

Ross admitted, according to police, the holdup of the pharmacy and also that he had taken at the point of a gun an automobile from a young couople Thursday night during the course of his mad dash for liberty after he had wrecked his own machine. He is being held in Fulton tower where he was taken from Grady hospital following treatment there for wounds received in his battle with the polie. His condition was reported yesterday as improved.

Social Welfare Group Committee Is Elected

Election of members of the executive committee of the Social Welfare council took place at an executive meeting last Thursday, it was announced yesterday by Boyce M. Edens, secretary.

Those elected were Margaret Fetner, E. M. Kahn, Frank Miller, Clara Nolen, Rhoda Kaufman, L. D. Sharp and F. B. Washington. Robert F. Maddox, James L. Wells, T. Guy Woolford and Mr. Edens are ex-officio members of the committee, representing the Atlanta Community Chest.

Election of officers of the council will take place at a later meeting, Secretary Edens said.

STORE TO RAISE FUNDS FOR SHELTERING ARMS

Haverty's Arranges Twelve Model Rooms To Aid Charitable Group.

As an outstanding feature of Sheltering Arms Week starting tomorrow at the Haverty Furniture Furniture Company, 12 model rooms have been decorated by various members of the club and the public is asked to judge the best one.

The rooms feature all of the popular furniture today, including 20th century modern, as well as 16th and 17th century styles. Bedroom, dining rooms, living rooms, sun parlors and kitchens have all been arranged and will compete for the prize offered by Haverty.

The public is not only cordially invited to see these rooms but are being asked to vote on the one they think best arranged. Attractive gifts will be given to all who vote.

Members of the Sheltering Arms will serve as hostesses during the week and inasmuch as a definite and liberal amount of each sale made will be turned over to this worthy Atlanta charity for their work in the two nurseries, the Atlanta public is asked to visit Haverty's before buying elsewhere.

"Officials of the company have made special low prices on all the new merchandise as an added inducement for the Atlanta public to buy furniture at this time," Mrs. William Akers, president of the club, said. "This enable those making purchases to save money for themselves and at the same time assist in the splendid work at the two Sheltering Arms nurseries."

3 SCHOLARSHIPS OFFERED STUDENTS BY HIGH MUSEUM

Three nine-month scholarships, providing fully paid tuition in the regular winter day school session opening September 9, are being offered by the art school of High Museum of Art here to the winners of an art contest open to all high school seniors in the southeastern states.

Rules of the contest are simple. Boys or girls may enter provided they are neither present nor past students of the High Museum and Art school. Those who enter will submit any two samples of drawings or paintings which they have done themselves in any medium, pencil, pen, brush, pastel, oil, water color or crayon. These samples should be sent to L. P. Skidmore, director of the High Museum of Art, at 1262 Peachtree street, N. E., so as to be received not later than June 29. Contest entry blanks, which may be obtained either from local high school principals or the museum and must be sent in with the samples.

One scholarship will go to an Atlanta student; the other two to residents elsewhere in the southeastern states. The judges will be J. J. Haverty, chairman of the board of the Atlanta Art Association; Sidney Dickinson, N. A., nationally-known portrait painter, and Mrs. Herbert Oliver, artist and patron of the arts.

The three judges will select the best work by an Atlanta student and the two best by outside students and they will receive the scholarships. Contest winners will be announced around July 16.

$4,000 ZIONIST FUND ONE-THIRD SUBSCRIBED

The campaign of the Jewish colony of Atlanta to raise $4,000 for the National Zionist Fund to purchase additional land in Palestine is already one-third of the way to the goal, with every indication that the city's quota will be oversrubscribed by the time the campaign ends June 9.

Concluding the drive, a victory banquet will be held at the Shrine mosque June 9 in honor of Morris Rothenberg, of New York, president of the Zionist fund. Civic leaders of Atlanta will attend the banquet honoring Rothenberg.

More pledges have been received to date than in any previous campaign and actual cash collections are greater than ever before, according to Harry M. Wengrow, treasurer of the drive. The steadily growing staff of volunteer workers has contacted only 25 per cent of Atlanta's Jewish population, but has raised nearly $1,500 so far.

Responsibility of directing the men's division as well as the women's division in the campaign has been shouldered by Rabbi Harry H. Epstein, of the Ahavath Achim congregation. Rabbi Epstein will address the Jewish people of Atlanta over station WGST between 12:45 and 1 o'clock today. He will outline the purpose of the campaign and ask the support of every Jewish citizen.

GROUPS ASKED TO JOIN IN POLICE BARBECUE

A general invitation to all industrial, civic, church and other groups to join with the Atlanta police department in staging a huge barbecue at Lakewood Park on June 6 was issued yesterday by Grover C. Fain, general chairman.

Groups accepting the invitation will be provided with a semi-private spot and tables for eating and at the same time will have the advantages of the dancing and other entertainment features to be furnished, Mr. Fain declared. The entertainment will start at 1 o'clock and barbecue will be served from 5 to 7 o'clock. Dancing will continue until midnight, Fain said.

Approximately 250 employs of the Downtown Chevrolet Company already have accepted the invitation and decided to stage their outing jointly with the police "spree." The company has placed its order for 250 tickets, Fain said.

Proceeds of the barbecue go to the police pension fund and persons attending the affair will be contributing to a worthy cause and at the same time providing themselves with an enjoyable outing, Mr. Fain pointed out.

RETRIAL HEARING HERE FOR HARVEY, SMITH

Hearing on the motion of Aubrey Smith and Leland Harvey, convicted in the federal district court at Rome Friday for the $9,875 pay roll robbery of the National City bank, of Rome, will take place June 15 before Judge E. Marvin Underwood in federal court here, it was announced yesterday.

Smith and Harvey, joint holders of the title of Georgia's Public Enemy No. 1, were sentenced to five years each in federal prison. The pair will remain in the county jail at Rome until just prior to the hearing on the motion for a new trial, when they will be brought to Atlanta.

The convicted pay roll bandits have reputations as "escape" artists, and they will be closely guarded by Rome authorities. In the event the motion for a new trial is denied Smith and Harvey will be taken immediate to a federal prison to be designated by the attorney-general of the United States. Because of their past records it is improbable they will be confined in the Atlanta prison.

Kiddie Revue Benefit for Hospital Starts at Grand Theater June 14

Plans for the seventh annual kiddie revue, to be staged at Loew's Grand theater the week beginning June 14, for the benefit of the Scottish Rite hospital milk fund, were revealed Saturday by Dr. Claude Hughes, general chairman of the milk fund committee.

Preparations for the revue include special lighting effects and scenery to be sent from New York, according to Lionel Keene, a past president of the Masonic Club, and present director of production for the show.

Other members of the committee, in addition to Dr. Hughes and Mr. Keene, are Mortimer H. Freeman, Julian V. Boehm and J. W. Setze Jr., vice chairmen; Eddie Melniker, assistant director of production; John L. Cone, president of the club; John H. Woods, secretary; Everett N. Brown, treasurer, and Henry Weber.

For many years the Atlanta Masonic Club has been responsible for the supply of milk for the patients at the Scottish Rite Hospital for Crippled Children. Through the generosity of Atlantans the supply has been plentiful.

Performers in the kiddie revue range in age from 3 to 11 years. Credit is due the dancing schools who train them to make them letter perfect in their routines.

In the lobby of the theater during the week, girls from Washington Seminary, members of the Pi Pi sorority, dressed as milk maids, and carrying pails, will take contributions from theatergoers as they pass in and out of the show.

"Those of us who have attended kiddie revues in the past and have watched the strong bodies of the children as they went through their dances, and have seen the straight arms and legs, cannot but think of the children at the Scottish Rite hospital who are undergoing treatment for twisted limbs. It is necessary that these small patients have plenty of sunlight, fresh air, and, above all, pure milk. To see that good milk is provided is the task and pleasure of the Atlanta Masonic Club," commented Dr. Hughes.

RED CROSS ROLL CALL TOTAL NOT COMPLETE

Although the concentrated Red Cross roll call has been completed, memberships are still coming in at headquarters, in Loew's Grand Theater building, it was announced Saturday by Julian V. Boehm, roll call chairman.

Memberships last year reached the total of 10,743, and the total this year to date is 10,200, with returns yet incomplete, Mr. Boehm revealed. Indications are that last year's figure will be exceeded by a substantial margin before the final report.

"Officials of the 1935 roll call wish to thank every one in Atlanta and Fulton county who co-operated with them during this successful drive. While the final report will not be made until next week, it is evident the memberships will be greater than at any time since the World War," said Mr. Boehm.

Doing without

Reliable Refrigeration in Your Home ... is False Economy

Food suppliers and handlers use Electric Refrigeration to protect the food you buy because they know they cannot depend upon old-fashioned methods.

In the home, too, old-fashioned methods can not be depended upon to provide the safe, cold temperature—always below 50 degrees—that prevents food spoilage. With these methods some foods become entirely unfit for use. Worse still—other foods which may look and taste and smell all right are absolutely dangerous because mold and bacteria have multiplied. There is no substitute for the safe refrigeration that a Modern *Electric Refrigerator provides—that's why doing without it in your home is actually false economy.

As ice melts, temperatures become warmer. Unless the ice is replenished at once, food is in danger of spoiling.

Window boxes cannot be depended upon for proper refrigeration. Freezing nights may be followed by warm days.

In the pantry, temperatures are usually too high in the daytime and foods kept there are apt to freeze during the night.

Cellars are naturally cool, but very seldom cold enough to provide proper preservation of perishable foods.

Film Exchanges Swell City's Wealth Over 3 Million Yearly

AMAZING GROWTH OF HUGE INDUSTRY RECITED BY HARRIS

BY JULIAN HARRIS

Movie audiences see and hear motion pictures in comfortable and attractive theaters, and since they go there to be amused or interested in the story unreeled for them, they have doubtless given little thought to the part played by this industry in Atlanta.

Naturally, the publicity agents, through advertisements and news stories, inform prospective theatergoers of the story, the cast and, often, the tremendous cost of a production. But the role of the distributors of motion pictures is rarely made clear, although it is not only an interesting but an efficient part in the industry.

For instance, in Atlanta, which is the southern center of the movie industry, there are at least 1,000 persons either directly connected with or allied in some way with one or another phase of this fascinating business. Included, of course, are the makers of pre-views and trailers, printers, the personnel of the many motion picture theaters, the distributors, and the film delivery companies.

It is estimated that the total pay roll required to keep the industry functioning here is not less than $3,380,000 a year; and this takes no account of rent paid. Yet 20 years ago the payroll was less than $300,000.

What is known as film row did not exist two decades ago. The few distributors here occupied offices in various buildings. Today the representatives—division and branch managers—of the big producers occupy their own buildings, all of them comfortably and efficiently arranged and many of them beautiful in appointments. These buildings contain not only the business and clerical departments, but the storing vaults, shipping departments, inspection rooms, and a special section set aside for advertising material, from hand-bill size to 24 sheet posters.

From where does the money come which pays nearly $3,500,000 in salaries and a very tidy sum for rent or lease-holdings? It is derived from the rental of films to motion picture theaters in southern states. The amount of these rentals paid by exhibitors to the producers, through the distributing offices in Atlanta is estimated variously at from $6,000,000 to $8,000,000 annually. It should be stated that the distributing offices here do not cover the entire south.

Part Played by Film Exchanges.

Doubtless some others are as ignorant of the function of the distributor as was this reporter when he set out to discover what all the shooting was about. While his own ideas were not as vague as those of a person who thought the films were sent direct by air mail from Hollywood to the myriad of motion picture theaters, he was unaware of many details of the work of a film exchange as the middleman between the producer and the exhibitor. And in his interesting visits with a score or more of district and branch managers, he met men whose names and likenesses are seldom seen in a newspaper.

Let us look about a bit.

For instance, in the southern territory, Atlanta is the district office as well as the local exchange center for the five or more southeastern states. In one of two instances, the district or division takes in eight southern states. The local exchange, or branch office, serves theater owners in Georgia, Florida, Tennessee and Alabama.

But the district offices, or subdivision offices, cover the several branch offices in the south. These are Atlanta, Charlotte, Memphis, New Orleans, Oklahoma City and Dallas. The district offices are headed by district or subdivision managers who have charge of the branches in the southern territory. Briefly, each branch manager deals with the theater owners in his territory and the district manager is the immediate chief of the heads of branches in his division.

Method of Selling Films.

In June or July, there are held producers' conventions. Here the films for the ensuing months are discussed and analyzed.

Following these meetings, the salesmen visit the various customers of their zone or exchange center. These customers are the exhibitors, who are the buyers of the forthcoming productions. This is called the trade "line-up."

This "line-up" is actually the yearbook, which contains the names of the stars or cast, the synopsis and special features of the stories to be produced. The exhibitor thus becomes acquainted with precisely what the producer has to offer. In addition to being informed concerning feature productions, the exhibitor is advised what "shorts" are available.

After a thorough examination of the "line-up," prices are discussed and productions purchased. In the contract, the producer guarantees to deliver these productions when they become available.

Motion picture films, including features and "shorts"—"shorts" are one or two-reel comedies, oddities and news—are contracted for from two to eight months in advance of showing. They are purchased in a group from the producer. The exhibitor has the right to reject a certain percentage, but is equally bound to accept a certain percentage. It is this method of selling, sometimes called block sales, which has been a bone of contention in the field of films. The recent meeting of "independents" in Atlanta took up this phase of picture production and sales with considerable vigor. There seem to be a sufficient number of arguments on both sides to keep the discussion going.

Number of Prints Carried.

The average number of prints or complete reels carried on any one feature—a feature is from 6 to 10 reels—is five. On outstanding feature productions, as high as 10 prints each will be carried.

In other words, if 40 features are released by any one exchange, this would make its average about 250 prints each year. The foregoing statement is predicated on the demand for exceptional features.

On short subjects, such as two-reelers, one-reel comedies, news, and oddities, the average rarely goes over five prints per subject. The average local film exchange will carry between 800 and 1,200 prints per year. Each print, or reel, is 1,000 feet long, and its running time will average 10 minutes. Therefore, a feature of eight reels will require 80 minutes of running time in a theater.

Advertising Aids for Exhibitors.

Before a production is released, whether it be a feature or a short subject, the producers have available for the exhibitor a complete lineup of advertising material handled by the accessory department. This department is prepared to give every conceivable help to the exhibitor in advertising each and every production that the producers have for release. The accessory manager, who is really an advertising expert, advises the exhibitor on what will sell that picture best.

First, the exhibitor is given what is called in the trade a "press book," which is usually from 8 to 20 pages and carries ideas on advertising and pictures and descriptions of outdoor paper. There are, as might have been expected, complete publicity stories for newspapers, as well as a variety of newspaper ads starting with one inch and progressing to full pages. Ideas on exploitation of the film are provided for the theater manager.

This "press book" is so constructed that the exhibitor or theater manager may select from it such material as he believes will help him sell this picture to the public. After making his selections, he places an order with the accessory manager for whatever mats, publicity or advertising, outdoor paper—which may be an insert for a theater lobby to 24 sheets for billboards—he may want, and they are delivered to him at once.

How Films Are Shipped.

Because of the fire laws in the various states, films are shipped only in galvanized boxes or, as commonly called, "film cans." These cans contain from six to eight reel of film for feature. Separate cans are used for two-reel and one-reel subjects.

With the starting of the film business, the method of shipping these films from exchanges to the theaters was by any and every means possible—by buggy, freight or express. Today they are shipped by motor truck, express or parcel post, and sometimes only truck transportation is used, so efficient has that service become.

The producers contract guarantees that the can of film will be on hand the day of showing scheduled by the exhibitor. Therefore films are usually delivered by outside business carriers such as Theater Service Company, Film Express, American Railway Express, Southeastern Express and parcel post. The film cans are delivered to the carrier at midnight before the day of showing. The procedure is somewhat as follows: The shipping departments deliver the films to the various transportation companies at 5 in the afternoon. The films are then delivered to the individual carrier. Between the hours of 11 p. m. and 6 in the morning the carrier delivers the new picture to the theater and receives for return to the exchange the film that has already been used.

If a film is not at the theater the day of the showing, it is then called a "missout" and the producers become responsible for what is commonly known as a "dark house." But by reason of the efficiency of method in the delivery of these films, the percentage of "missouts" is a remarkably small per cent. But even when a "missout" occurs, it does not mean that the film is not finally delivered in time.

On one occasion, a "miss out" occurred in Knoxville, as the film was taken to Nashville by mistake. The transportation company chartered a plane and flew the film to Knoxville in time for the scheduled opening performance. At another time when a "miss-out" occurred through the fault of an exhibitor, who routed a print into Atlanta instead of to Birmingham, the manager of the Theater Service Company hustled into an automobile and delivered it in Birmingham on time although he had an extra cost of $17.50 as a fine for speeding.

There are two firms operating moving picture film delivery service by motor trucks out of Atlanta, the Theater Service Company and Film Express Company. Both are qualified carriers under the rules of the public service commission of the states in which they operate. These companies operate 21 trucks, giving daily service out of Atlanta over a radius of 300 miles from this city, the total daily mileage being approximately 5,100 miles, with Atlanta as the center.

Keeping Films in Condition.

In each Atlanta film exchange there is an inspection department, which employs on an average, five inspectors—young women.

After a film has been shown in a theater in this section, it is returned to the Atlanta exchange which sent it out. It goes at once to the inspection department where it is carefully examined, cleaned, and, if need be, repaired. As a result of this care, a film is always as good as new.

In addition to nimble fingers and keen eyes, special machines and equipment, as well as detectors aid the young women in this delicate work, which is essential in order to keep the film in perfect condition.

Stars Only Numbers in Storage.

Storage vaults, as strong as those in the average bank, as fireproof as a reservoir, are a part of the equipment of each local exchange. Some exchanges have as many as seven of these impervious vaults. There are two steel doors. The one on the outside, used for an entrance, closes automatically whenever a person enters the vault. The inner door remains open, but is arranged, as in a sprinkler system, so that the slightest amount of heat releases it.

The film cans, which weigh about 50 pounds when they contain a six or eight-reel film, are about square in shape and made of heavy metal.

In one of these cans there may be a Clark Gable or a Myrna Loy feature, which, when thrown on the screen would cause romance to blossom. But in these vaults on steel racks, Clark Gable or Myrna Loy, or whoever your favorite screen actor may be, is nothing but a number.

When the shipping clerks calls, for instance, for No. 131-A, the picture to be projected may be packed with $900,000 worth of heart-throbs, but to him it is a can of celluloid worth, intrinsically, about $250, and which anyone can see on a screen for 30 cents. The sole interest of the shipping clerk is to be sure it gets away in time to make the next showing. Yet, one wonders what might take place if, as on the screen, the celluloid prints could express themselves. What a fantasy might take place under the unseeing eyes of the shipping clerk.

Code Authority Represented.

Few industries, if any, seem to be free from misunderstandings or grievances of some sort of government supervision. The motion picture industry is not an exception.

The code authority for the motion picture industry is represented in Atlanta. There is a board which supervises for the code and its duty is to investigate and settle any disputes that may arise between the exhibitor and producer.

The judges on this board are selected by the local exhibitors and the distributors who act as representatives of the producers. This board is known as the grievance board. All matters where misunderstandings arise are referred to the board which is final word locally. In charge of this office in Atlanta is E. L. Cole.

Public Relations Representatives.

In the exploitation and publicity department of the south E. B. Coleman represents the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation. He has been in Atlanta about 11 years and covers 12 southern states. Ted Toddy is public relations director for the Columbia Pictures in the south, and has been here more than six years. Their business is to assist exhibitors with publicity and exploitations and give all assistance possible for the purpose of helping the exhibitors properly to exploit in order to make a success of the films purchased.

Concerning the Distributors.

From every corner of the United States have come to Atlanta the men who represent the producers of motion pictures. In addition, there are several local concerns which produce, and the heads of these organizations are located here.

Among the district and branch managers of the most noted film companies are men who have been in some way connected with the films for a quarter of a century. Some of them have been in Atlanta long enough to remember when the Vaudette theater on Whitehall street near Mitchell was the de luxe local motion picture theater. And there were the Twin theaters on Whitehall. The Savoy, the Montgomery and the Criterion came along later.

The men at the head of the distribution of films in this territory recall the old days when Maurice Costello, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, King Baggot, Flora Finch and Broncho Billy Anderson, who began before the days of Mary Pickford, Charley Chaplin, Bill Hart and others of that group, who are looked on as old-timers by the present generation.

Since there are among the district managers in Atlanta at least two colonels, it might be well to let rank prevail.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER.
Colonel Kessnick Recalls.

It is not easy to carry on a conversation when a desk phone is jingling every few minutes. But between outside calls and dispatch of business details it was revealed that Colonel Charles E. Kessnick has nearly arrived at his majority in the film industry in Atlanta, for it was 20 years ago he headed in the direction of Atlanta and the responsibilities which a district manager must bear.

M.-G.-M.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—occupies a $65,000 building, and the appointments are in keeping with up-to-date offices.

"My first contact with the theater was as an usher," recalled Colonel Kessnick. "Jake Wells gave me the job. Then I was promoted to 'prop' man. If you had been present when Marlowe and Sothern appeared in Richmond in 'If I Were King' you would have heard the finest stage thunder ever manufactured. I rolled the cannon-balls.

"I was fascinated by what we now call the legitimate shows.

"Never shall I forget when as a youngster I saw Charles Yale's 'The Devil's Auction.'"

A pause, then: "Oh, yes, it's the movies we are talking about, isn't it? I was with Arthur Lucas in Washington, and from there went to Philadelphia as a salesman for Mutual."

In Atlanta, Colonel Kessnick was first branch manager for the Mutual, then division manager of M.-G.-M. His territory now includes, in addition to the Atlanta territory, Memphis, Oklahoma City and Dallas. When he entered the films, the favorites were Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Flora Finch, Bill Hart and Broncho Billy Anderson.

"Few industries have shown progress equal to that of the motion picture industry in the past five years," said Colonel Kessnick.

"Motion pictures constitute the entertainment for the masses. For a few cents the average man and woman gets amusement which required many brilliant minds to plan and direct, and equally able actors and technicians to translate into screenable action. I really think that good movies help to make a happy country.

"Two features related to motion pictures are yet to be developed—color and television. Three-color pictures are on the way and television is in the making, though some years in the offing."

Asked what his hobbies are, Colonel Kessnick replied: "Fishing and horseback riding with the Oklahoma cowboy."

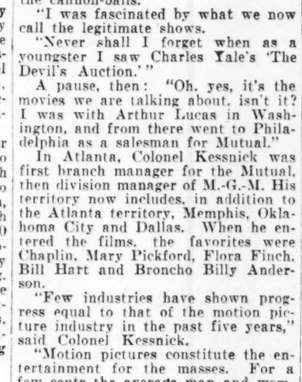

Quoth Oklahoma Cowboy.

The Oklahoma cowboy is none other than Roy Avey, branch manager of M.-G.-M., who was transferred from Oklahoma City, where he was film salesman, to Atlanta in January of this year. His hobby is horseback riding.

Mr. Avey entered the film field with Select Pictures in 1920. Metro-Goldwyn next claimed him.

"It is my impression," said Mr. Avey, "that the motion picture industry is going into one of its finest years so far as productions are concerned. The 1935-36 season will be signalized by unusually good pictures. There is undoubtedly an increasing trend in the direction of better and cleaner amusements."

Asked about censorship, Mr. Avey replied: "The need for outside censorship is decreasing rapidly. Censorship is now being handled as it should always have been—within the industry."

Bill Coleman (left), public relations, M.-G.-M., and Ted Toddy, public relations, Columbia.

COLUMBIA PICTURES.
Colonel Moscow Reminisces.

Colonel Sam Moscow, district manager of Columbia Pictures, heedless of cravat or coat, leaned back in his ample chair, smiled, and met an interrogation with a question:

"Before we talk about me or motion pictures, tell me something about Ralph McGill. I've long wanted to meet him. His sports column is always great but in one he was tops. Do you remember it? 'It Feels Good to Walk.' How he can write!"

Finding his interviewer in hearty accord with his praise of Ralph McGill, who is also a colonel, Colonel Moscow wanted to know if Harry Ballance had been interviewed.

"A great division manager, that airminded Fox film division manager," continued Colonel Moscow. Then in reflective mood: "I might have been a sports writer or a publisher. You see I started as a printer. Then my hand got mixed up with a press, so I turned to singing when illustrated songs were shown. Most of the good singers would get drunk from time to time, so I kept sober and filled in enough to keep going.

"Impressed more by my sobriety than by my vocalizing, the theater manager made me his assistant. I helped manage his theater in Boston, where I was living. Then I managed the Plaza theater in Salem, Mass.

"When the man with whom I was associated became manager of the Warner Pictures, I trailed along. Again I followed him when he went with Columbia Pictures fifteen years ago and had the New England franchise. When Columbia Pictures became a national organization, I had charge of the sales in the Boston territory.

"About five years ago I was sent to Atlanta. It has been fine here. We've had remarkably good luck—have done exceptionally well. Our personnel has more than doubled. And a wonderful group it is. What record they made when I was in the hospital three weeks!"

Asked what he believed the trend to be in motion pictures, Colonel Moscow replied:

"In my opinion we are going more and more in the direction of the classics. In the final analysis, that seems to be what is wanted by the people who have not been movie fans. Naturally, we want to win the full support and increasing interest of this big section of occasional theater-goers. 'One Night of Love' proved that the trend is unquestionably to better things."

Concerning censorship, Colonel Moscow said the motion picture industry had found it to be to its advantage to work from within in the matter of censoring. He feels sure that the needs for external censorship is dwindling and will recur rarely.

"Marvelous was the influence of the talking pictures," continued Colonel Moscow. "It is my opinion that movies were at the lowest level of subjects and the industry could not think beyond a certain cycle of pictures when the talkies came."

W. W. Anderson Recalls.

W. W. Anderson, branch manager of Columbia Pictures, who entered the motion picture business 30 years ago, has spent half that time in Atlanta.

"In 1907," said Mr. Anderson, "when I was in Chicago I was in charge of the first motion picture house south of Sixty-third street. It was at the corner of Sixty-ninth street and Halstead. Now there must be nearly 300 motion picture theaters south of Sixty-third street.

"The big favorites back in those days were Bill Hart, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. I have seen the inauguration of talkies, from the first raucous, rasping affair to the present almost perfection.

"And how the industry has grown in Atlanta. If you take account of all the concerns which play a part in the motion picture industry here, including everything from the theaters to the important and effective truck delivery service over four states, the total personnel is not less than 1,000.

"This means that the total pay roll in Atlanta is certainly not less than $3,380,000 a year and probably several hundred thousand more. Conservatively, I should say the rentals amounted to more than $6,000,000."

FOX FILM CORPORATION.
Flying Ace of Fox Films.

Harry Ballance, who has been in the motion picture industry more than 20 years, and with Fox Films during the past three, is known as the "Flying Ace of Filmdom." He owns and flies his own plane and, when it is realized that his territory extends from Charlotte on the north to Dallas, Texas, as well as Oklahoma and the cities of Memphis and New Orleans, it is obvious that he needs an unusually swift method of transportation. Mr. Ballance began his motion picture career as salesman in California in the days when Maurice Costello, King Baggot, Frances X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne and Broncho Billy Anderson, along with Mary Pickford were the stars of the silent screen. Although he has been with Fox Film Company in Atlanta for only three years, he has trebled its business and his district leads the nation in all the Fox districts, and in this district Atlanta is first, with New Orleans second and Charlotte, third.

It is Mr. Ballance's opinion that human interest in motion pictures is rapidly driving a "colossal scene" style of picture into the tall timbers. "For instance," said Mr. Ballance, "'The Little Colonel,' 'Judge Priest' and 'It Happened One Night' were all three very simple but human talkies.

"It is my opinion that the trend in motion pictures is changing. In view of the fact that my contacts are in such an extensive territory, I am able to get a pretty good idea of what people like. Fox Film Company frequently gets its eight district managers together for discussion and exchange of ideas. For a picture which pleases the south may not please New England.

"As far as my own organization is concerned, I believe in developing manpower within our own ranks. It is my endeavor always to advance a man if he is capable, and in this organization they usually are.

"My other hobby, as you know, is flying. I have been flying 10 years, have my own machine and have a government license. Some day when you are not busy, drop in and I will show you a map that I am charting for my trip in the general direction of South America."

Paul S. Wilson, Branch Manager.

Mr. Wilson began 18 years ago inspecting films. He worked his way through different departments and until three years ago was with Paramount. He has been located in Boston, Los Angeles and the Arizona territory, and was in Memphis in 1930.

"It is a grand business—the motion picture industry," said Mr. Wilson. "We are always living in the future, working out changes of every kind, whether in technique or in stories.

"It seems to me that there is now more interest in pictures which have an element of comedy and pathos or which are musical in type in preference to the high powered love making type. I believe that the industry is still in its infancy and that color can and will be used advantageously in portions of films.

"A happy feature of our Atlanta office is Mr. Ballance's interest in adding talented local men to our organization. We try to find places for at least 8 or 10 a year. Seven Tech boys are now in our Atlanta organization, working at jobs of shipping, booking and sales. In two years our personnel has increased 50 per cent."

NATIONAL SCREEN SERVICE.

Charles Lester, division manager of National Screen Service, which prepares previews and trailers for exhibitors, was a lieutenant in the army in 1919 and resigned to go with Universal Film Exchange. He came to Atlanta three years ago to take charge of the National Screen Service district for this section. It has grown in recent years until the Atlanta office now has 26 employes.

"National Screen Service," said Mr. Lester, "makes contracts with distributors for weekly service, and we make previews, which are scenes out of the pictures, as well as trailer scenes, used in connection with a voice in the background. We pay a royalty to distributors and, since the screen is the most valuable advertising asset next to newspapers for an exhibitor, this form of advertising has been found to be most effective.

"This phase of the motion picture industry is most interesting, and its development has been widespread. For instance, our company has an office in London, which does the same work for the British Isles that it does for the United States.

"We ship our material to exhibitors about 10 days in advance. In the handling, shipping, and inspecting, we carry out the same routine as that used by the film exchanges."

R.-K.-O.
Hubert Lyons, Branch Manager.

Hubert Lyons made an early start in the motion picture industry. He began when he was 15 years of age with his father in North Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia, which one would guess was anywhere from 20 to 25 years ago. His first work "on his own" was as salesman for First National when R. D. Cader owned the southern franchise for that company.

"The growth of R.-K.-O. business has kept pace with the splendid progress of the film industry in Atlanta. In fact expansion of R.-K.-O. necessitated their moving into a new building about 10 days ago. "We spent about $9,000 on the old M.-G.-M. building," said Mr. Lyons, "and we are now in quarters which will be somewhat more adequate to our needs.

"It is my impression that in the past four years amusements in the south, both legitimate and on the screen, have improved at least 60 per cent. One reason the south has shown this improvement is that in the boom days big theaters were built in various important cities in this section—something which would not have been possible during the rapidly passing depression days. But as business has improved, these theaters have been ready to be developed as money making properties."

PARAMOUNT PICTURES
Oscar Morgan, Former Photographer

Oscar Morgan, district manager of Paramount, received the thrill which comes once in a lifetime when, as photographer for a New York newspaper, he took his first picture of John D. Rockefeller at Lakewood, following the fining of the millionaire by Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, who set the amount at $29,000,000.

"At that time," said Mr. Morgan, "Mr. Rockefeller was giving away nickels instead of dimes, but after I had taken the picture, he gave me a dime. So maybe I received the first dime of his new gift dispensation. It was, I think, in 1907."

"I wonder," asked Mr. Morgan, "if you remember that the first cartoon film with sound was put out by Pathe in 1928—a series of Aesop's Fables?

"It seems to me that the greatest improvement in motion pictures relates to sound equipment, which has gone ahead tremendously in the past two years. Two years ago it had a recording range of 9,000 vibrations, where now it has 15,000 vibrations per second. You can readily understand that whereas, when sound was first introduced, you could not hear either the high notes nor the sound of a drum in an orchestra, the reproduction of sound is now almost perfect."

Asked what he thought about the future of television in the tie-up with the theater, Mr. Morgan said that, with the great strides made by science and the technical improvements, he certainly would not venture to say it would be impossible. He thought that perhaps it might be used in a theater to bring events like baseball or football where synchronization of sound with movement was not as essential as, for instance, in a play or an opera.

Dave Prince, Branch Manager.

Nearly 30 year ago Mr. Prince was interested in the motion picture industry. He was with Real Art in 1915 and 1920 when among the motion picture stars were Mary Pickford, William Hart, Charles Ray, Henry Walthall, Douglas Fairbanks, Dustin Farnum.

"When I came to Atlanta," said Mr. Prince, "there were no suburban theaters. The Howard theater, which is now the Paramount, had just opened. In those days we used the express to distribute films, whereas now we are using not only parcel post, but trucks. Truck service in film delivery in Atlanta is amazingly good and the 'missouts" are very rare indeed. I recall when Arthur Lucas had charge of the distribution of Goldwyn films and William Jenkins was district manager for Triangle.

"There was no such thing as 'film row' in those days and no one would have prelicted at that time that the film industry in Atlanta would have developed as it has, with its millions of dollars in pay rolls and rentals and at least a thousand persons in the industry and allied organizations here."

When first asked for this interview, Mr. Prince laughed and replied: "I don't like to be questioned." He added: "Upon one occasion I was on the witness stand for 30 days when the federal trade commission investigated block booking. This was in 1924. I was on the stand both morning and afternoon and I did enough testifying in reply to questions to last me a couple of lifetimes."

UNIVERSAL.
John Ezell, Division Manager.

"I've only had two jobs in the film industry," said Mr. Ezell. "First with General Films, which was then known as the motion picture trust. Now there are eight major companies as well as independent distributors.

"I can recall the first talking picture film, which originated with Warner Bros. The equipment was undeveloped and often did not work. For a while it looked as if 'talkies' were sunk."

Originally from Tennessee, Mr. Ezell migrated to Texas as did years ago another notable Tennessean, Sam Houston, the first president of the Lone Star state. He was, said Mr. Ezell, glad to be in Georgia, which had furnished Texas its first vice president and second president.

As for talk about the growth of the film industry, "you talk to Jordan," suggested Mr. Ezell. "He can tell you lots of things."

Mr. Ezell smiled and retired into his silence.

Remember the Vaudette?

C. T. Jordan, branch manager of Universal, is one of the few native Georgians at the head of film branches in Atlanta. He hails from Maysville. More than 25 years ago, when the film industry was in its super-swaddling clothes, he found that the prospect pleased him.

"In my early days," said Mr. Jordan, "there were only three national film companies—Consolidated, Mutual and General Films.

"I can remember, too, when the Vaudette, near the corner of Whitehall and Mitchell streets, was the finest motion picture house in Atlanta. It was known all over the south as a deluxe movie theater. I think that John Evans, now at Tenth Street theater, was one of the moving spirits in the building of the Vaudette.

"Then there were the Twin theaters on Whitehall street near Alabama. They were called the Twin theaters because when you paid a nickel to see a picture in one house you received a pass to see a movie in the other. Later came the Savoy and the Montgomery. Then the Montgomery and the Criterion. Later came the Howard, now the Paramount.

"The Universal was formerly the Consolidated and Billy Oldknow was the holder of the franchise for the south in those days.

"When you look back at the old days of nickelodeons and flicker films, it makes you realize the progress the motion picture industry has made. When sound was first introduced it was regarded as a failure. Look at it today."

BROMBERG ATTRACTIONS.
Arthur Bromberg Looks Back.

Arthur C. Bromberg, head of Bromberg Attractions, which is more or less the Monogram Pictures Corporation of the Southeast and the Republic Pictures Corporation of the Southeast, is a genuine pioneer in the film industry.

It was 25 years ago that he became intrigued by the celluloid industry, and in the spring of 1920 took the field with his own organization. He now has five branches.

"Speaking of old times," said Mr. Bromberg, "I can recall how we had to hustle to keep the films moving. In those days there was no Theaters Service Company with trucks to handle our prints.

"We shipped by express and often we would wait up until midnight to catch films in the express office, put a new tag on it and send it along.

"When Theodore Roosevelt returned from Africa he brought back films of the expedition. I had to get them to Chattanooga to beat another concern. I took them first on a train, then rode in a buggy to a junction and caught the train to Chattanooga, beating my competitor by two hours. Those were happy, hustling days when competition was in full blast.

"In the early days a feature was either one reel or two reels. For instance, one of the most popular films of that time was 'The Great Train Robbery,' an Edison one-reel. Another popular film came from Italy and was called 'The Fall of Troy.' It was a two-reel film. The rental for a one-reel film was $5 and for a two-reel, $25.

"Anyway, it was a lot of fun," concluded Mr. Bromberg.

Discovering an Atlantan.

John Mangham, branch manager of Bromberg Attractions, was born in the Gate City. He has had wide experience, beginning as a salesman.

As branch manager he has been particularly interested in the transportation of films. From Mr. Mangham were obtained the stories, already related, of the plane flight from Nashville to Knoxville, when a film was taken to the Tennessee capital by mistake. It cost the transportation company $90 for the plane and it re-received only $1.50 as shipping charges, but a "miss-out" was avoided, though, by minutes.

VITAGRAPH, INC.
From Usher to Manager.

H. J. Ochs branch manager of Vitagraph, which distributes Warner Brothers' and First National films and Vitaphone short subjects, began his theatrical career as an usher in Keith's. He was later a sound equipment salesman, an exhibitor, a film salesman, and now is in charge of distribution in four states—Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and Florida.

It should be mentioned that he took time out for the war, and after the Armistice went back to pictures. His principal steps as a manager were Dallas, San Antonio, Memphis and, for the present, Atlanta. And he seemed to mean it when he said he was delighted to be located here.

As there has been some discussion along film row concerning the first sound pictures, an appeal was made to Mr. Ochs to settle the matter, since he was acquainted with the progress of sound equipment.

"It was either a picture in which Al Jolson appeared or 'Don Juan,' in which John Barrymore took the leading role," replied Mr. Ochs. Which

Veto of Bonus Bill Outstanding in News of the Week

PRECEDENT IS SET WHEN ROOSEVELT APPEARS IN HOUSE

President Says Emphatic 'No' in Space of Few Days to Three Powerful Groups.

Interpretation.

By BYRON PRICE.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—(AP)—President Roosevelt's bonus message and his lower-than-expected wage scale for work relief have furnished the highlights of a Washington week which poses once more a familiar question: Is the administration preparing now to turn definitely to the conservative right?

As on previous occasions when this inquiry has been revived by developments, the answer is subject to many complications. There are two ways of looking at it.

The obvious view is that within the space of a few days the president has said "no" with emphasis to three powerful groups of citizens—the veterans, the inflationists, and union labor.

His veto message on the paper-money bonus not only rejected all of the favorite arguments of the soldier organizations, but quite obviously was calculated as well to install into the more conservative ranks of business some of that "confidence" in the future of the currency for which right-wingers have been praying.

His decision to pay work relief wages below prevailing union scales not only angered various union leaders but unquestionably brought solace and encouragement to various large private employers who have complained repeatedly of union labor "domination" over Washington.

But that is only one part of the picture. There are other considerations which make it hazardous to conclude that Mr. Roosevelt, at one stroke, actually has said goodbye to the veteran, the inflationist, and the labor vote in 1936, and joined up with the forces of organized business.

Even while the president was speaking to congress, and while the house was overriding and the senate sustaining his veto, administration men were at work to patch up a compromise by which the bonus issue could be revived and something done for the veterans in another way.

The impression persists in some very well-informed quarters that the bonus will yet be paid, perhaps in modified form, during the present session of congress. Whether it will be paid over another veto, or with presidential acquiescence, is not wholly clear. Direct as it was in the main, Mr. Roosevelt's message was read by some as indicating a certain sympathy for getting this matter settled, one way or the other, without further delay.

So far as inflation is concerned, the message was quite explicit as to the president's opposition to "printing press" money. Yet an examination of the credit and currency structure will disclose that the machinery already is at hand for at least a tremendous credit inflation, whenever the administration desires it; and the currency stabilization so earnestly sought by right-wing groups apparently is as far away as ever.

Speed.

It was a year ago today that the "Zephyr," of the Burlington, dashed from Denver to Chicago in the record-smashing time of 13 hours 5 minutes. Last week the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul claimed that its full-sized steam train of six cars had made as high as 112 miles between St. Paul and Chicago.

The fascination for speed, and more speed, will find its thrills at the Indianapolis speedway this week. Preparations for this motor classic ended the lives of three men last week. W. H. Stubblefield, 27, veteran Los Angeles pilot, hurdled the wall while completing his qualifying run. To death with him went Leo Whittaker, his mechanic. Earlier the same day Johnny Hannon, Norristown, Pa., lost control of his car. He is dead, but his mechanic may recover.

Luckier were D. W. Tomlinson, a lieutenant commander in the United States naval reserve, and his co-pilot, Joseph Bartles. On a 670-mile (1,000 kilometer) triangular course—New York, Washington, Norfolk—they made eight new international records. Five records were taken from France and two from Spain, and in two instances no previous record had been established.

Foreign Affairs.

Adolf Hitler, hemmed in by the French-Soviet Russia mutual assistance alliance, was on the defensive. He made peaceful overtures to the powers.

Addressing the reichstag, der fuehrer declared:

"Germany has nothing to gain from any European war. We crave freedom and independence."

The third reich, Hitler declared, will abide by all limitations of the Versailles treaty, excepting the military clauses which already have been abrogated. This applies to territories taken from Germany at Versailles.

Further:

The third reich stands ready to fulfill all obligations of the Locarno pact of non-aggression and mutual assistance in western Europe, a pact given little thought in Europe of today. It is willing to participate in all endeavors for disarmament and arms limitation, even to the scrapping of the new submarines. It is hoping for an accord on the aerial pact among western nations of Europe, proposed by England.

One thing Hitler will not do: Join in any mutual assistance pact for eastern Europe (the proposed eastern Locarno). He is willing to engage in non-aggression pacts, but no more.

The reich, he said, could never be drawn into a position of fighting on the side of soviet bolshevism.

"We are its bitterest and most fanatical enemies," he said.

The address found some favorable reaction.

England urged Foreign Minister Pierre Laval, of France, to visit Berlin for personal conferences with Hitler. The nazi leader would welcome the Laval visit. But it was up to the French cabinet to decide.

London pushed its aerial proposals anew.

Moscow, as it does with all of Hitler's declarations and actions, adopted an attitude of skepticism and pessimism.

Il Duce, too, was conciliatory for a change.

He agreed to the demands of France and England for arbitration, under the sponsorship of the League of Nations, of Italy's dispute with Ethiopia.

This submission came somewhat as a surprise. For days Mussolini had persistently told England and France to keep "hands off."

France was alarmed over the financial situation. The flow of gold out of French vaults persisted. Strong action was needed to keep the nation on the gold basis, which Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin was determined to do.

The premier prepared to ask parliament for full powers of a financial dictator. The old, old French problem of the balanced budget was at hand again. Flandin is prepared to balance the budget by drastic economy to save the franc.

The deputies, up for re-election soon, are unwilling for economy.

Complete collapse of the efforts to stabilize wheat production and prices was averted when the international wheat conference, in London, was adjourned for a year. All the "teeth" in the international agreement have been removed and the conference continues merely as a medium of exchanging ideas for future effort.

Jane Addams.

In the death of Jane Addams, whose influence and service to humanity were international, not only America but the world lost a notable figure. She was a champion of world peace, and never lost courage in her fight to make persons and nations realize that war was not merely brutal but bootless.

Miss Addams, who would have been 75 years of age next September, died following an operation. She was founder of Hull House in Chicago and had been awarded a Nobel prize for her efforts for peace. Her unflagging interest in social work inspired others to accept her unselfish and inspiring viewpoint.

Despite the fact that there were attempts to discredit her patriotism, she went ahead with her work. Recently Secretary Ickes called her "the truest American."

A last tribute was paid to the founder of a new order of social service, in simple funeral rites in the garden court of Hull House, the settlement she founded 47 years ago.

Dean Charles W. Kilkey, of the University of Chicago chapel, summed up her life in a translation from the four-word Latin epitaph for Sir Christopher Wren inscribed over the inner doorway of St. Paul's cathedral in London, which he had designed and built.

Nationwide.

By RICHARD H. HIPPELHEUSER.

NEW YORK, May 25.—(AP)—The president stood firm. There was no quibbling in his veto of the Patman bonus bill.

Establishing a precedent, he went to Capitol Hill to read his message to the congress, in joint session and then hand it in person to Speaker Byrns.

"I am thinking," he said, "not only of the past, not only of today, but of the years to come.

"In this future of ours, it is of first importance that we yield not to the sympathy which we would extend to a single group or class special legislation for that group or class; but that we should extend assistance to all groups and classes who in an emergency need the helping hand of the government.

"I cannot in honesty assert to you that to increase the deficit this year by two billion, two hundred million dollars will in itself bankrupt the United States.

"Today the credit of the United States is safe. But it cannot ultimately be safe if we engage in a policy of yielding to each and all of the groups that are able to enforce upon the congress claims for special consideration.

"We can afford all that we need; but we cannot afford all that we want."

The congress, republicans and democrats alike, arose to cheer the president's blunt and forthright message.

But hardly had he left the capitol, hardly had the cheers died down, before the house of representatives voted, 322 to 98, to override the veto.

Next day, in the senate, the veto was sustained, 40 to 54.

The veto message was a statement of conservatism in financial policy.

The Patman bill was particularly obnoxious to the White House. It provided no tax levy to meet the two billion expenditure. It called for new currency.

The progressive bloc supported the Patman plan, but did so not particularly for immediate payment of the bonus, but for expansion of the currency.

LABOR PROTESTS.

There was another element of conservatism in the week's news.

The president set the wage rates on public works projects at $19 to $94 a month.

The lowest rate applies for unskilled labor in the small-town counties of the south. The scale is graduated upward in proportion to population and wage levels.

There are numerous exceptions. Prevailing wages will be paid on construction of federal buildings. Local wage conditions will prevail in the construction of PWA projects.

Organized labor protested against the rates. Labor contends the rates will beat down the entire wage scale of the country.

Labor, however, appeared more concerned over the extension of the NRA and, here, found itself working in common cause with the president.

At a Madison Square Garden mass meeting, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, issued the threat of a widespread, if not general, strike unless the NRA was extended for two years.

The thousands roared their approval when Green shouted:

"We will refuse to work and will mobilize our entire economic strength unless we get our rights."

"Our rights," in this instance, includes also passage of the labor disputes bill of Senator Robert Wagner, which furthers the intent of Section 7A and outlaws the company union.

AROUND THE CAPITAL:

The senate approved the largest naval appropriation in peace-time history, $460,000,000. The bill went to conference with the house.

Dennis Chavez, of New Mexico, the democrat appointed to succeed the late Bronson Cutting, was sworn in. The senate progressive bloc left their seats, walked from the chamber as Chavez was given the oath. This was a protest against administration's political tactics against Cutting.

Norman Armour, veteran career man of the state department, was named minister to Canada.

The treasury imposed a ban on the importation of silver coins. This was a co-operative measure to aid foreign nations harassed by high silver prices.

AROUND THE COUNTRY:

The Illinois relief crisis has ended. Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins promised an immediate $5,000,000 after the legislature hiked the sales tax a cent to raise the state's share of relief funds.

The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin organized the New York unit of his national union for social justice at a Madison Square Garden rally.

The threat of a general strike in the bituminous coal mines was precipitated again by the collapse of the wage scale negotiations. John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers, said strike plans would be discussed next week in Washington.

Organized agriculture in Illinois, at a mass meeting in Peoria, gave their approval to the AAA program and to Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace's conduct of office.

On Bradley's Trail.

The story of the American Bond & Share Corporation and its affiliates, the "Ponzi" scheme which took hundreds of thousands of dollars from the pockets of Georgia investors before it was exposed some three months ago, again won the front page top line last week when Benjamin R. Bradley, fugitive president who is under indictment in both state and federal courts, was reported found in Buenos Aires. Bradley's full description and photograph were immediately sent to the federal consular service and if the suspect is really the missing man, steps for his extradition will be taken at once.

Another echo of the famous case reached the front page Friday morning in the form of a story of the indictment, by the New Orleans federal grand jury of Turivas & Company and 20 individuals. This was one of the group of "securities investment houses" which were smashed during the investigation of the entire scheme. The company is now bankrupt and the Atlanta branch office was forced to close last December by receivership petitions that charged operation of a bucket shop and outright fraud.

Southwide Activities.

Flooded streams, leaving hundreds homeless and at least two dead, rampaged through parts of Louisiana and Arkansas this week.

Earlier in the week, tornadoes ripped through the south, killing four in Alabama and Mississippi. Over 20 drowned in Texas and Oklahoma floods.

Beer and wine were declared officially legal in Georgia, but liquor was outlawed by 243 votes. Wets lost several skirmishes in the courts, seeking to reverse the dry verdict.

Bonnie Hill, New Orleans night club playgirl, was convicted of manslaughter in the knife slaying of John Irving Pierce, prominent Jackson (Miss.) youth, but her sentence was deferred.

Long contested, the validity of the family plan for disposal of the $28,000,000 Smith Reynolds estate was considered by the North Carolina supreme court.

Reports were circulated that martial law, in force in Louisiana since January 25, would be lifted.

Ranks of the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union were split wide open with E. B. McKinney, a negro, and W. H. Stultz, both claiming the presidency.

A 90-day divorce law, seeking part of the marital rift business from Florida and Arkansas, was started through the Alabama legislature. Florida's lawmakers battled off attempts to impose a sales tax, but a bill levying a tax on gross receipts of retail stores neared enactment.

An injunction to restrain Sheffield and Tuscumbia, Ala., from borrowing money from PWA to construct municipal power systems, was denied by Judge C. P. Almon.

Establishment of a newsprint mill in the south was sought by southern newspaper publishers, meeting in Hot Springs, Ark. Emanuel Levy, vice president and general manager of the Louisville Courier-Journal and the Times, was elected president of S. N. P. A.

Another chapter in the "legs" murder of Mrs. Daisy Keeton was unfolded at Laurel, Miss., when W. M. Carter, prominent businessman, went on trial in the case. Mrs. Keeton's daughter has already received a life sentence.

Strides in aviation development were reviewed by the national advisory committee for aeronautics at Langley field, Virginia.

At Columbia, S. C., leaders of Methodism in the Carolinas and Georgia paid tribute to the memory of Bishop Francis Asbury, organizer of the first Methodist church in South Carolina. The occasion was the two-day celebration of the sesquicentennial of Methodism in South Carolina.

Georgia Happenings.

A caravan of 75 cars from Atlanta carried Boy Scouts to Macon and the Indian mounds on the banks of the Ocmulgee river were inspected. The party was in charge of George P. Freeman, Scout executive. These recently excavated mounds as a FERA project have proved to be of rare historic value.

The Georgia Business and Professional Women's Clubs meet at Millen and hear Miss Gay B. Shepperson, state relief head, report that in two years $50,000,000 had been spent in Georgia for relief. Mrs. Viola Ross Napier, of Macon, elected president succeeding Miss Rebecca Shuman, of Atlanta.

Leland Harvey and Aubrey Smith, notorious Georgia convicts, were found guilty at Rome in a pay roll robbery committed last August and sentenced to serve five years each in prison. The case was tried in federal court. A new trial will be sought. The pair, facing sentences approximating 100 years, were pardoned several months ago by Governor Talmadge.

At the convention of Georgia Odd Fellows at Fitzgerald, J. F. Goodwin, of Atlanta, was named grand patriarch; A. A. Thomas, of Savannah, grand master, and Savannah named as 1936 convention city.

Georgia pharmacists met at Albany and adopted resolution praising President Roosevelt and asking extension for two years of NRA. Tom Linder, state farm head, spoke on drug laws. R. L. Olive, of Augusta, was elected president and Macon selected for next year's meeting.

Eight billion dollars in foreign bonds are still held by Americans, the Georgia Bankers' Association was told at its convention at Sea Island by C. M. Mills, of New York. H. Grady Langford, of Meansville, was elected president. Augusta named for 1936 meet.

Henry W. Grady was a vigorous personality and did more to cement good feeling between north and south than any other man, Dr. E. M. Coulter told university students in an address here on the Georgian's birthday, which is May 25.

The suspension of Rev. McBrayer, in Atlanta, by the Methodist conference, for advocating the repeal of the state dry laws in the recent election, was assailed before Georgia hotel men in Savannah at their state convention by Clark Howell Sr., of The Atlanta Constitution, and W. T. Anderson, of the Macon Telegraph. Resolutions offering the minister aid were passed by the convention.

Farmers' March.

Southern farmers returned last week from their visit to the president—the "March on Washington," it was called by more captious critics—and returned to their plow-share. But echoes of their trek to the national capital stirred the senate to warm discussion.

Secretary Wallace joined from the sidelines. He denied assertions by Senator Hastings, republican, Delaware, that the agriculture department or the AAA encouraged or financed the recent farmers' capital invasion. Wallace declared that other groups had descended previously on Washington to influence legislation and that "surely the farmers have the same right."

"The Agriculture Adjustment Administration has not sponsored nor financed, nor permitted its agents to sponsor, nor permitted County Production Control Association funds to be used to finance the farmers' visit to Washington," Wallace said. "On the other hand, the adjustment administration has never denied the right of farmers to visit their capital, has not attempted to discourage them from doing so, and upon their arrival in Washington welcomed them, and rendered to them assistance requested by them when we could give it."

After the farmers arrived, Wallace said, he and Farm Administrator Davis welcomed them and asked President Roosevelt to speak to them.

Hastings asked the senate if anyone thought the president would have greeted a veterans' march "as he did the farmer?"

Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, the democratic leader, interrupted to say the 300 farmers from his state had not received "one dime in any form from AAA" and that he had received a letter from AAA denying it had advised the "march."

Wallace's statement reached the capitol as Hastings asked the senate whether President Roosevelt would have addressed 4,000 veterans urging bonus legislatoin as he did the farmers and asserted the Chamber of Commerce was not invited to the White House because the president knew it was going to adopt resolutions condemning his administration.

Prohibition.

Official results of the repeal election were proclaimed without official comment by Governor Eugene Talmadge. Repeal was defeated by 243 votes—for repeal 81,891; against 82,134.

Beer was legalized and the vote opens the way to wines. While the law acted on by the voters makes only wine made in Georgia of Georgia products legal, it is the opinion of informed authority that wines from other states cannot be barred. Since Georgia wines, of an unnamed percentage of alcohol, are legal in the state, it is believed that any effort to keep out other wines would be in conflict with the interstate commerce act.

Believers in repeal sought during the past week to stave off defeat. An effort was made by William G. Hastings to have declared illegal the official count of three dry counties. The results in those counties were transmitted to Secretary of State John Wilson after the three-day limit contained in the liquor control act had expired. The Fulton county superior court refused to outlaw the votes of the three counties, and Councilman Hastings, who is a leader of repeal forces, has taken the question to the supreme court. If the returns from the three counties involved should be declared not valid, repeal will have won.

Meanwhile Mayor James L. Key, of Atlanta, and Councilman Howard McCutcheon, proponents of operation of a municipal liquor store, failed of their efforts to get the backing of council. They have begun the circulation of liquor store petitions asking for 10,000 signatures "to bolster the weak-knees of a timid council." They will try again to push through their plan at the June 3 meeting of council.

Another repercussion of the repeal election is the removal of Rev. H. E. McBrayer from the pastorate of the Lakewood Heights Methodist church. His dismissal was based on his active advocacy of repeal in spite of the objection of church leaders. Rev. Mr. McBrayer has asked for a trial, and in the meantime 43 members of his former church have withdrawn, formed a new organization and "invited him to be their pastor."

Flies With Bat Wings.

Equipped with curious bat-like wings, William Picune, 19-year-old parachute jumper, glided over Teterboro (N. J.) airport at an altitude of 8,000 feet.

Riding against the wind like a bird, Picune drifted two miles before he opened his parachute at an altitude of 3,000 feet. He descended at Little Ferry, landing unhurt, in a tree.

The wings, which Picune makes fast to his arms, are made of canvas with light wooden ribs resembling an airplane fuselage. Each wing is about three feet long and two and a half feet wide. The youth also had a strip of canvas about three feet square sewn between the legs of his jumpers. This, he said, enables him to change direction and execute stunts by kicking his legs and holding them at varying angles.

Mystery Plane.

Speedier than anything the army has ever flown, a "mystery plane" constructed by the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Company, has successfully passed preliminary tests.

The single-seater fighting ship is described as "years ahead of anything yet produced in military aircraft," of radical design and equipped with every known aid to aerial navigation.

A low-wing monoplane of all-metal construction, the new fighter is said to have slotted wings, a new type retractable landing gear and invisible bomb compartments fashioned like trap doors in the wing. Space for gunnery equipment also is provided.

But 25 feet long, the plane is described as having a wind spread of 49 feet, with power coming from a single twin-whirlwind motor mounted in the nose.

The ship is revealed as being a wing with fuselage added, rather than fuselage with wings extending from the sides. The pilot's compartment is rivited to the wing structure, is unusually streamlined and compact, and entirely encased with metal except for the top which is of rounded glass.

Lloyd Childs, test pilot who has been putting the ship through its paces before the critical eyes of army fliers, said "it's wonderful." He refused to comment further.

Ralph Damond, president of Curtiss, also refused to discuss details of the plane except to confirm its classification as a "mystery ship." He admitted its speed would be greater than that of any army plane heretofore.

Tests will continue under guard for several weeks before the plane is turned over to the army for acceptance.

"Sound has been vastly improved," added Mr. Ochs. "And just here I should like to say that the motion picture houses in Atlanta, Knoxville and Birmingham are really beautiful."

Asked about the outlook for the motion picture industry this year, Mr. Ochs replied:

"Superb; if our business last week is a criterion. For we had a record-breaking week, going ahead of any week in the past year. I believe business will be better in the south than in the east this season."

AFFILIATED PODUCERS, INC.

Business Killed His Garden.

Thomas Brandon, head of Affiliated Producers, Inc., has been in the motion picture business 21 years. He came to Atlanta from Charlotte, N. C., in 1921.

Originally with General Films, in the Washington territory, and later with Universal, at Charlotte, Mr. Brandon discovered that the only way to have his own business was to start it. And he did.

Since he is a Tarheel, he began in Charlotte, but when the sound era—it sounded like an error at first, commented Mr. Brandon—arrived, he closed his North Carolina office and came to Atlanta.

"My first office here was in the Hirsch building," said Mr. Brandon. "My employes numbered four. Today I have the offices you see, and employ 30 persons. The Charlotte branch has been reopened. Business is good and getting better."

Asked about the early days of the film industry, Mr. Brandon recounted how, in the early days, that as the strip of film was unreeled, it fell into a cracker sack. In those days the film was called a "piece." Later came "spools" and then reels.

Mr. Brandon believes that despite elaborate and sophisticated pictures, a very large part of the public likes and wants western and action and serials. They still like their hero and heroine to go into action in the wide-open spaces, rather than in over-perfumed salons, explained Mr. Brandon.

The telephone rang. Evidently someone wished to consult Mr. Brandon concerning the planting of tomato slips.

"That was Mrs. Brandon," he said. "Last year I started a vegetable garden at home. This year I abandoned it to the weeds, because business was so good I couldn't attend to it."

FIRST DIVISION EXCHCANGES.

Quarter Century of Pictures

W. T. Richardson, district manager of First Division Exchanges, entered the film industry 25 years ago as a shipping clerk. His first real experience was with Bill Oldknow, in Dixie Films, an independent organization.

Mr. Richardson remained in Atlanta until 1914, when he was transferred to El Paso, as branch manager. After six years in Texas, he went to New Orleans with Consolidated, which became Universal in 1924. In 1930 he returned to Atlanta as district manager for the south for Universal, but in December, 1934, formed First Division, an independent distributor.

"It is my belief," said Mr. Richardson, who stopped a moment to greet Oscar Oldknow, the son of his first employer, "that the motion picture industry will continue to progress.

"Unquestionably, color has posabilities, particularly for big spectacles or shorts.

"Although this branch has been open only since January 1 of this year, there are evidences of excellent business ahead. Later we shall have an important announcement to make."

UNITED ARTISTS.

Eiseman Favors Small Units.

Clarence Eiseman, branch manager of United Artists Corporation, was for 20 years with General Films, in Washington, D. C. He has been in Atlanta three years.

It will be recalled that United Artists was organized about 15 years ago by Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Gloria Swanson and Douglas Fairbanks, the two last named have withdrawn from the organization, which was formed to distribute the films made by the stars mentioned.

"It is my belief, as it is that of the producers releasing through United Artists, that the most successful motion pictures can be made only by small units," said Mr. Eiseman. "This is true because, when a producing organization makes only a few pictures and is not pressed to carry out a schedule, there is more time for details in preparation and an opportunity for perfection in production."

On the subject of censorship, Mr. Eiseman said he believed that the industry itself had become its own severest critic. Each picture must pass the closest scrutiny before it is released.

SAVINI FILMS.

Began as an Operator.

N. E. Savini, head of Savini Films, began as an operator, 25 years ago, and knows what it is to unreel a film into a sack. Within a few years he was managing a Canal street theater in New Orleans, where he was born.

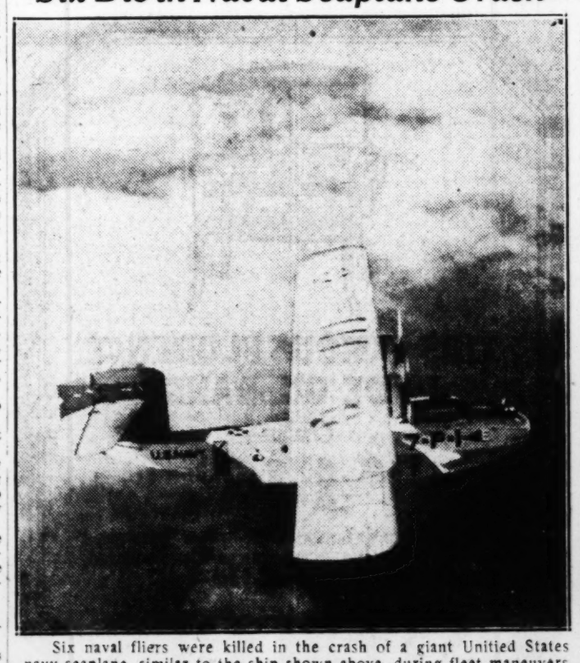

The war drew him away from the film industry, but he was back again in 1919, when he came to Atlanta to go into partnership with his brother. Later the brother went to New York, and is now general manager of the Atlantic Pictures Corporation. Mr. Savini distributes films for Atlantic, Astor Pictures, and B. & B., three-reel westerns.

"It is my impression," said Mr. Savini, "that the producers are getting away from high-powered drama and gangster stuff. We have never yet equalled the 'Birth of a Nation.'

"One feature of our plan is the reissuing of worth-while films. I believe, as a well-known critic has said, 'seeing great pictures over again is more fun than seeing poor new ones for the first time'."

A stimulating thought, it would seem, with which to close a story relating to the film industry.

WOMEN CALLED UPON TO BACK BLUE EAGLE

Organizer of "Womancott" Says Duty Is To Continue Fight.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 25.—(AP) Miss Mary E. Hughes, of Louisville, who headed the women's division of NRA, today called upon women of the nation to present a solid front for continuing the National Recovery Act "as long as the president desires."

Miss Hughes organized the women's division under the Blue Eagle in 1933 and coined the word "womancott" to describe the weapon she helped forge to aid the president's recovery program. Her call to support the president who has asked for a two-year extension of the NRA, was her first public statement since she left the NRA with dis ontinuance of the women's division January 1 last year.

"Women of the nation," she said, "followed their leader, the president, in organizing the Bl Eagle drive two years ago, as a matter of patriotic duty in the war on depression.

"It is obviously their duty to continue that fight now.

"I call upon you, women of the nation, to present yourselves solidly for continuation of the NRA as long as the president desires.

"The only way to bring complete success to the president's plans is to carry on with him—where he leads."

Big Coal Company Celebrates Fiftieth Anniversary

Wine Making Method Described For Home Consumers in Georgia

This is the first of a series of articles on wine and wine-making which, it is believed, will prove of unusual interest to readers of The Constitution in view of the recent legalization of Georgia-made wine. The next article will appear in an early issue. —Editor's Note.

By W. A. RITCHIE.

Wine making is one of the most ancient of arts. The basic principles of changing luscious grapes into a drink often called the nectar of the gods remain practically unchanged over thousands of years. By following a few simple directions, the private citizen can produce a most palatable grade of wine.

First of all, under today's conditions, it is necessary to obtain a permit from the Atlanta office of the alcohol tax unit, located on the seventh floor of the Hurt building. This permit costs nothing; it merely gives the holder permission to manufacture 200 gallons of wine in one year for home consumption only. The permit, however, is very necessary, inasmuch as the home vinter is liable to have his wine confiscated if he has not obtained the A. T. U. sanction.

Under federal regulations only the head of a family may obtain a permit to make wine for home consumption. And the wine cannot be taken off the premises. It may be served guests in the home, but it must not be sold. The longer new wine stands in the casks, the better it is, but even a red or a white wine a few months old makes a most satisfactory beverage.

To Make Red Wine.

Red wine is made from grapes having red pigment in the skin. The amateur wine maker should obtain the desired quantity of red-pigmented grapes and crush them with a roller. This roller may be purchased at any hardware store, or one can be made by proper utilization of an old clothes wringer.

Put the whole crushed mass into pottery or wood jars or casks. If casks are used the tops should, by all means, be knocked out. Once in the casks, the yeast that nature deposited on the skins of the grapes, causes the process of fermentation to start.

The fermenting mass should be left undisturbed until it ceases to "tick" and the grape skins and seeds sink below the surface. This process as a general rule requires several weeks.

Draw the fermented juice off into clean wooden casks, press the wine from the residue in a little wine press, which likewise may be obtained from any hardware dealer, and then leave alone until the secondary fermentation is over. Be sure to leave the bung out of the cask while this fermentation is going on, as shutting off of air stops fermentation.

Improves With Age.

When the secondary fermentation ends you have wine. It is wise to seal in the bung—drippings from a tallow candle can be used to make the bung airtight—and let the wine stand in the cask to age and mellow. The impatient winemaker can drink his wine as soon as he desires, but, as has been said before, it is much more palatable if allowed to age.

Alcoholic content of wine is determined by the sugar content of the grapes from which the wine is made. The Georgia law prohibits the addition of cane sugar when making wine, so Georgia home vinters should secure very ripe grapes if possible. Grapes permitted to ripen to the fullest extent on the vine contain the most sugar.

To Tell Alcoholic Content.

The winemaker can obtain a saccharometer, costing 83 or $4, which will tell him just what the alcoholic content of his wine will be. When pressing the grapes a quart of juice should be pressed by hand into the tube of the saccharometer. If the gauge registers 24 per cent sugar, then the alcoholic content of the resultant wine will be about 12 per cent, which will be found to be highly satisfying. If, on the other hand, the saccharometer shows only 14 per cent sugar content of the grapes, then the wine will be only 7 per cent alcohol.

White wine is made by exactly the same process as red wine. With both red and white wine, after the primary fermentation, the casks used for the secondary fermentation should always be kept full so as to admit no air into the cask itself. Air inside the cask causes disease and vinegar fermentation, much to the sorrow of the winemaker. Mix a little sugar with distilled water in a bottle and add just enough to the cask each day to keep the liquid content of the cask level with the top of the bung.

CAMPBELL COAL MARKS 50 YEARS OF PROGRESS

The Black Rock Country Club yesterday was the scene of a golden anniversary celebration, participated in by nearly 300 persons, each wearing a badge indicating his connection with the Campbell Coal Company, whose founding in 1884 they were celebrating.

As speaker of the occasion, Preston S. Arkwright outlined the history of this leading Atlanta company which has grown to be the largest in its field in the south, and which has played a leading part in the building of the city. Campbell Coal Company was established in the spring of 1884 in a tiny shed at the foot of Spring street, where the Seaboard Airline freight depot now stands. The company was operating on the proverbial financial shoestring, and the initial stock of coal so completely absorbed the capital funds that not even mules could be purchased. Mr. Arkwright in his talk recalled how they often rented the "horse-car" mules from the traction company which existed then as forerunner of Atlanta's street railway system. In particular there was a mule named "Hamp" which had the strength to pull more than the customary half-ton through the mud of Atlanta's then unpaved streets; and at 50 cents a day rental, "Hamp" shortly became a problem, because the bill quickly ran up beyond his value. A compromise was effected and he became part of the owned equipment of the young organization.

Opened Mines of Own.

Early in the proceedings, the trade which developed among the best families of the city became so textensive that securing coal was something of a problem, and the Campbell brothers cast about for a means of insuring good service and good coal, to maintain the standards they had set up. There seemed at the time no way of stimulating the coal mines to better service, so these pioneers opened up mines of their own. These they operated for some years, until more dependable service was available, when the mines were divorced from the Campbell coal organization, and finally sold to other interests. Simultaneous with this, they became the outlet in the southeast for a number of mines whose coal had proven to be high in heat value and both economical and practical for Atlanta homes, commercial establishments and industrial plants. The company was doing a big business—yet in those early years the entire annual consumption would hardly equal the volume of coal now kept constantly at hand in the 10 yards scattered strategically throughout the city.

It is interesting that while they were the first coal merchants in Atlanta to adopt motor truck delivery, they did so with real reluctance. The reason is curious. In those days no point in the city was more than a mile and a half from a Campbell yard and as loading and unloading time was longer than time in transit, the speed of the motor truck was then no real advantage. Today Atlanta has grown so widely that any other form of transportation would leave much to be desired, even though the yards have kept pace with the city's growth.

Building Materials Added.

In the early days it was decided that there was room in Atlanta for an active dealer in building materials, so such a department was added to the business. Entering this field with the same thoroughness and aggressiveness, they soon built that side of the busines to the point where today this concern is tht acknowledged leader in the entire south. Recently, to round out a complete line of building materials, Campbell erected one of the largest woodwo king plants in the city, which operates constantly to keep pace with the demand occasioned by the revival of building now under way in Atlanta.

Looking forward to the future, Campbell Coal Company officials point to prefabrication, new materials, new methods, new equipment and new ideas on the part of the people, which will all play a part in the years to comt. "I want to say for the Campbell organization," said an official, "that we are fully alive to the situation, making plans accordingly, and the public will find us a jump ahaed as the development takes place, as we have tried to be all during the half-century of our existence.

"Our job," he continued, "is to supply the people of Atlanta with comfortable homes and as they change their ideas of what is comfortable in a home, we will change with them. While there are many of us in this organization who ha e been here a long time, our ideas are young and fresh and our long experience has served only to prove that we must change constantly with and ahead of conditions." Campbell Coal Company directors are J. B. Campbell, chairman of the board; R. R. Johnson, president; L. H. Jackson, vice president, and James L. Girardeau, vice president and treasurer.

Among other executives and employes who have grown up in this organization and have seen 15 years or more service are F. M. Digby, G. E. Heyser, G. C. Smith, E. E. Broughton, D. B. Stewart, T. F. Jett, C. N. Jernigan, H. G. Jernigan, R. H. Peavy, N. E. Garland, F. J. Shipp and A. O. Baxter.

Walter Millis, Atlantan, Author Of Widely Read Volume on War

An Atlantan, Walter Millis, son of Mrs. Mary Raoul Millis, is the author of one of the most widely read and most-talked-of books of the year, "Road to War—America."

Mr. Millis' latest book is a story showing the changing currents of American sentiment in the three years preceding the world conflict.

It is singular that the author is the son of a soldier, Colonel Walter Millis; the grandson of another soldier, Captain William G. Raoul, and that he himself was a soldier, having served in the S. A. T. C. at Yale in the fall of 1918.

The book tells of the activities of allied agents to build up sentiment in America, a sentiment intended to make the United States an ally.

In it the author says:

"The merits of the struggle are beyond the book's scope and it is no part of my purpose to defend the German cause or attack that of the allies. Since it deals with an episode profoundly influenced by a passionate acceptance of the Entente case, much of it is necessarily devoted to a criticism of that case."

Mr. Millis cites the activities of British writers in telling of alleged German atrocities in Belgium and says that at the time the campaign was staged in America to help the "starving Belgians," that people was in need not because of German invasion of their country but because of British blockade of their ports.

The author was born in Atlanta on March 16, 1899, the son of Captain Walter Millis and Mrs. Mary Raoul Millis. His early life was spent in close communion with the army, his father having served in a number of forts in this country and its possessions.

He attended Moses Brown school at Providence, R. I., and graduated at Yale in 1920.

Since his graduation, Mr. Millis has been in newspaper work in Baltimore and New York.

EXHIBITION OF ART BY LAMAR BAKER WILL OPEN TODAY

An exhibition of paintings and drawings by Lamar Baker, local artist, will open this afternoon at the Studio Club on Forsyth street. A group of the pictures have just arrived from the Grand Central Galleries, New York, where they were entered in the Prix de Rome competition, a contest sponsored annually by the American Academy in Rome. Mr. Baker was the only southern artist mentioned by the New York criticis, his work being described as "refreshingly different" by the New York Times.

Although this is Mr. Baker's first one-man show he is well known through his student exhibitions at the High Museum of Art, the Castle Studio and the Studio Club. He recently won the annual life drawing prize offered by the last named group, this being the fifth prize won by him at the Studio Club.

Vacation Time's Near For 70,000 in Schools

Atlanta-operated swimming pools will open next Saturday for the summer months, George I. Simons, general manager of parks and playgrounds, announced.

Hancock will speak Thursday morning, following which the final business session will be held.

The annual banquet and floor show will take place Wednesday night at the Winecoff at 7:30 o'clock. The entertainment committee consists of George C. Munn, W. C. Thompson, A. H. Lloyd, George Goodwin, H. J. Davis, W. L. Horne, J. C. Aycock and R. D. Snider.

Officers of the association are George T. Watts, president, Rome; Sweeney Sikes, Augusta; Don C. Hancock, Cartersville; Claude Trawick, Macon, and S. P. Wright, Columbus, as vice presidents, and M. Lawrence, of Atlanta, secretary-treasurer.

About 250 delegates are expected for the two-day meeting.

DOROTHY KIRBY MEETS DEFEAT IN SEMI-FINALS

By Dwight L. Pitkin.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 25.—(AP) Miss Marion Miley, of Lexington, and Miss Mary Rogers, of Jacksonville, Kentucky and Florida state champions, today went into the finals of the women's southern golf tournament.

Dorothy Kirby, Atlanta's 15-year-old former state champion, lost, 3 and 2, to Miss Rogers over the 18-hole route of the Louisville Country Club course.

Misses Miley and Rogers will meet for the championship at 36 holes tomorrow. Eighteen holes will be played beginning at 9:30 a. m., central standard time, and the other eighteen will start at 1:30 p. m.

LOSES RABBIT FOOT.

Miss Jameson, who defeated Miss Miley, 1 up, in a 19-hole semi-final match of the southern at New Orleans last spring, lost the rabbit's foot luck emblem she carried then just before the start of today's match.

"I must have lost it on the practice green this morning," she said.

Her game was ragged and she frequently missed putts that would have kept her in the running.

Competing for the first time in the southern, the Georgia youngster was unable to overcome the early lead taken by the more experienced Florida player. The final result was announced as 4 and 2 for Miss Rogers, but she conceded her opponent a long putt at the 16th to halve the hole with 3's, giving Miss Rogers the match, 3 and 2. The match was dormy at the end of the 14th hole which Miss Rogers won with a par 5 to make her 4 up. Miss Kirby won the 15th with a par 3 and to have kept in the running it was necessary for her to win the next hole.

A GOOD START.

In the first semi-final match, Miss Miley made a good start by winning the first hole with a five, which is men's as well as women's par. She was on the green in three after driving 225 yards from the tee. Miss Jameson, who had driven equally as good, overshot the green in her approach and was on in four. Miss Miley putted to within two feet of the cup and sank the next one. Miss Jameson had a six.

Both had fine tee shots at the second and were on the green in two, sinking five-foot putts for birdies to halve the hole. Again driving with the force of men players, they covered the 556 yards down the third fairway on fairly equal terms and were on the green in four. But Miss Jameson's putt was too strong and Miss Miley, who had shot within a foot of the cup, sank the putt to win the hole with a par five against Miss Jameson's six.

The Kentucknian's iron shot from the fourth tee landed on the green in a valley 115 yards away, while Miss Jameson's shot hit the edge of the green and rolled off. Miss Miley won the hole with a par three after Miss Jameson had overshot the pin and had to take a four.

HOLDS ADVANTAGE.

Both were off the fifth green with neat 200-yard drives, but Miss Miley had a 25-yard advantage on the next shot. Miss Jameson got on the green with a pretty approach shot but Miss Miley outdid her opponent by landing close to the cup. The titlist failed in her try for a 15-yard putt and had to be content with a par five while Miss Miley scored a birdie to make her four up.

Miss Miley was smiling happily while her opponent clearly showed she was under pressure. She picked up a clover blossom and put it in her mouth and she took careful aim for the drive down the sixth fairway. She shot into the rough, however, and dubbed the next shot.

Miss Miley, who also had gone into the rough, recovered with a beautiful iron shot and was on the green in three, against four for her opponent. Miss James.n was stymied after vainly attempting to make a 30-foot putt, and Miss Miley won the hole with a par five against her opponent's seven.

Under the pressure of her opponent's subpar shooting, Miss Jameson lost an opportunity to win the next hole. Miss Miley's drive was in the rough at the edge of the fairway but both were on the green in three. Miss Miley was 10 feet from the cup and Miss Jameson only two feet away. They halved the hole with par 5s when Miss Jameson failed to sink the short putt.

BARELY MISSES.

At the eighth green, Miss Jameson rimmed the cup with an eight-foot putt and Miss Miley sank a five-foot putt to win the hole with a par 5 against Miss Jameson's 6.

Both ran into difficulty at the 182-yard par 3 ninth hole. Their iron shots landed in the rough to the left of the green. The Texan recovered with a neat approach shot that brought her applause from the gallery of 300 persons. Miss Miley, who had gotten in trouble at the same hole yesterday, again landed in a sand trap and her next shot took her to the opposite side of the green. Miss Jameson won the hole with one over par against Miss Miley's 5.

The Kentucky titlist was 5 up at the turn, going out in 40 to equal women's par which she would have broken if she had not got into difficulty at the ninth green. Miss Jameson was out in 6 above par.

So rapidly did the players swing over the hilly course, that many of the gallery, puffing under the warm sun, had to run to keep up with them.

Miss Jameson staged a comeback attempt at the tenth. She was down the 390-yard fairway with two beautiful drives and took two putts to score a birdie. Miss Miley had a par 4.

Apparently finding herself, she drove 200 yards down the fairway from the 11th tee and was on in 2. Her opponent, who had landed in the rough, took three strokes. But Miss Jameson's try for a 5-foot putt was too strong and Miss Miley sank one for eight feet to halve the hole with par 4s.

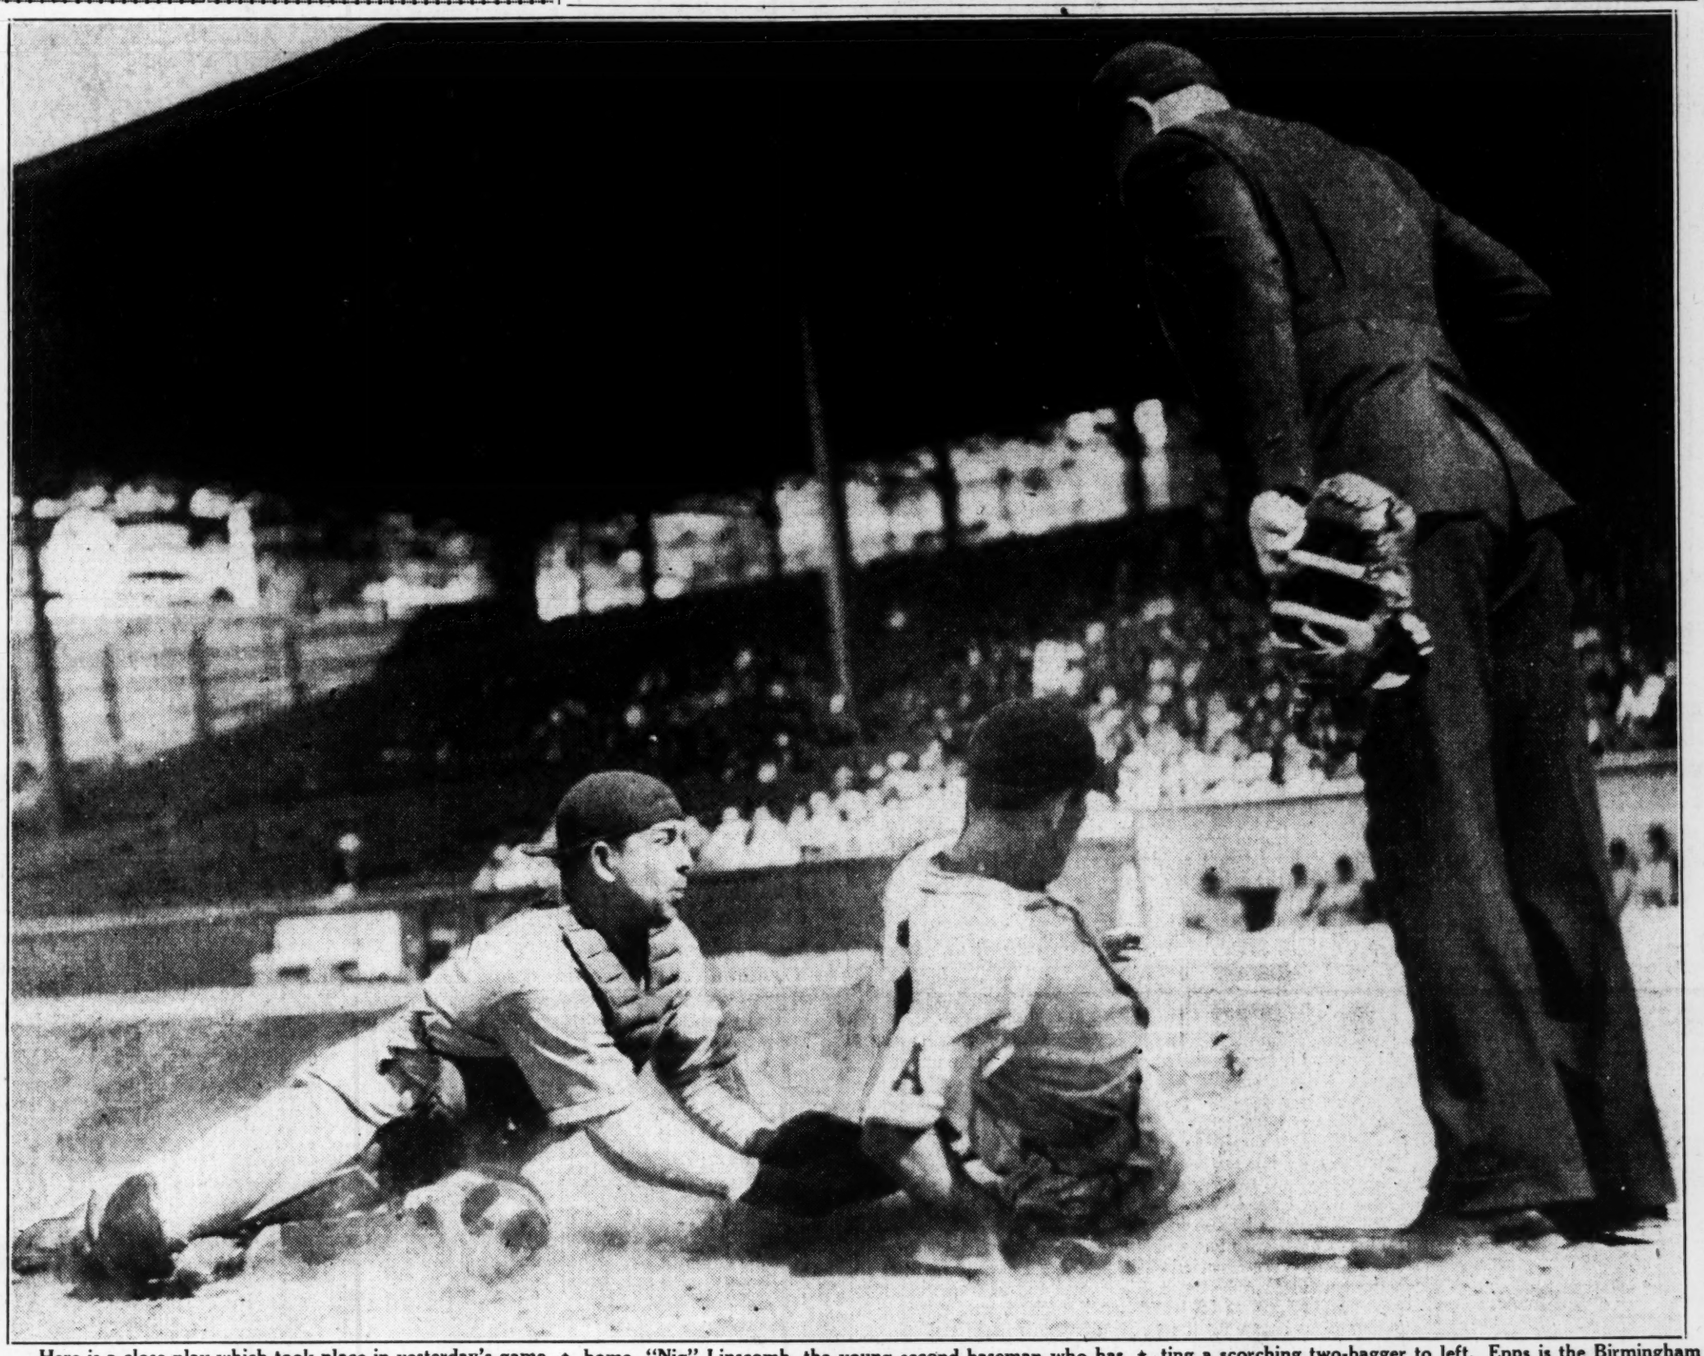

After her opponent's remarkable putting, Miss Jameson drove into the rough on the 12th fairway and was

'Nig' Is Nailed At Home Plate

ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 26, 1935.

Here is a close play which took place in yesterday's game between the Crackers and Birmingham Barons, which the former won at Ponce de Leon park, 4-2, to make it three straight over that club and 13 victories out of 15 games at home. "Nig" Lipscomb, the young second baseman who has been playing great ball for the Crackers, is shown being tagged out on a close play at home plate in the first inning when he attempted to score on Pinky James' roller to third after hitting a scorching two-bagger to left. Epps is the Birmingham catcher and Umpire McLarry can be seen calling Lipscomb out. This was one of several close plays at the plate on both sides. Staff photo by George Cornett.

"The depression saved me," said Jim Lindsey, the big Cracker right-hander, as he gazed at his leg.

There were three ugly looking wounds on the said leg and Jim Lindsey was taking a look at them, watching them heal.

"The depression saved you?" asked an incredulous listener. "It didn't save anyone else."

"Well, said Jim Lindsey, "the other day when I run over there to cover first and Hooks throws me the ball, I do not stumble as some of you reporters wrote. It pains me, because I am awkward enough anyhow, to have someone say I stumble when I do not. The fact is this Malinosky stepped on my leg, as you can see, and threw me to the ground."

"Well," said one of his listeners, "I am still waiting to hear about the depression saving you."

"Do you see these holes," said Jim Lindsey, pulling up the leg of his pants, and pointing to the three shallow holes.

"Yes," said the observer, "and they do not look pleasant."

"Well," said Jim Lindsey, "if this Malinosky was not a victim of the depression he would have had on a new set of spikes instead of those old ones and the result would have been that he would have just about cut my leg off at this point instead of merely puncturing it."

All of which seems logical. The depression permitted Jim Lindsey to keep both his legs.

She is here for a brief rest and has nothing to say. Which is, of ccurse, the sensible thing from her viewpoint. Because she is seeking no publicity.

"I suppose you have been worried a great deal by newspapers," I suggested.

"Well," she said, "you might say that."

LITTLE REPEATS IN BRITISH PLAY

By Gayle Talbot.

ST. ANNE'S-ON-THE-SEA, England, May 25.—(AP)—William Lawson Little Jr., the colossus from California, fixed the mantle of golfing greatness more firmly on his shoulders today when he defeated Dr. William Tweddell, a 38-year-old British physician, one up, in 36 holes and won the British amateur golf championship for the second straight time.

Thus the burly, 24-year-old San Francisco shotmaker became the first player in history to win three consecutive national amateur golf crowns and the third man ever to register a "double" in the 50 years of this championship.

WITHSTANDS PRESSURE.

During a sensational struggle which saw the husky holder of the British and American Simon-pure titles three up at the end of the morning round, only to be brought back on even terms with six holes to go in the home stretch, Little played some of the grandest golf in his career. He withstood paralyzing pressure over the final, windswept passage to subdue Tweddell, the winner of the 1927 championship, who made a bold bid on the last nine holes.

Desperately needing a four on the final hole to assure victory, the American skillfully got off one of the most testing shots of the tournament, hemmed in on three sides by a gallery of almost 10,000 which had verged on riotous conduct over the prospect of witnessing Little's downfall.

Standing on the 36th tee, Little was dormie 1. Tweddell, having the honor by virtue of winning the previous hole, divided the fairway with a 250-yard drive. Earlier in the day Little had been belting the ball from the tees fairly consistently about 300 yards. Down the stretch, he was hard pressed and sacrificed accuracy for distance. He sliced his drive into a swarm of spectators standing in the rough and the ball settled on a bare spot.

AMERICAN FLAG.

His fore-caddy, with a stick flying an American flag, rushed to the spot and fell on all-fours, animal-like, to prevent the rampaging spectators from trampling on the ball. Little slowly ambled up to the ball and with characteristic impassiveness viewed the situation without a sign of emotion. One hundred yards distant was

Give Moore Credit For Wonderful Job

Gets Results With "Common Sense" Baseball Where Others Failed; It's "We" on Field.

By Jimmy Jones.

A little of that same self-effacing spirit which prompted a certain great American flyer to include his machine in the conquest with a modest "we" when he spanned the Atlantic has made of Eddie Moore, leader of the league-leading Atlanta Crackers, a winning manager.

He has let fall a few kind words here and there in an atmosphere that had known only harsh and sulphuric epithets and they have borne fruit.

When the distraught directors, after futile experimenting with several managers with "names" and reputations, called Moore in last September and made him manager of the club, he was figuratively and literally on the spot. And last spring, after the team had made a driving finish of the 1934 season to win nine out of ten games, he was on even more of a spot for there was that build-up to overcome.

But Eddie Moore set his square Irish jaw, forgot the mental hazards of the job, the defeatist's complex and the tradition of failure and went about his task methodically and as quietly as possible.

His first act was to take his men into his confidence, treat them as fellow human beings and fellow ball players instead of as subordinates. Then he set out to mould them into a team with spirit and unity.

This he accomplished by applying common sense tactics. Some of them had been overmanaged and nagged at too much, he simply let alone to find themselves. To the youngsters he dropped a few helpful hints, occasional words of advice.

KNEW HIS POSITION.

Eddie Moore knew when he took the job that it was a delicate proposition, that he could make few, if any mistakes. To date, his mistakes have been very, very few, both on the field and off. He has handled his men and his job smartly if not brilliantly. And his brand of baseball has earned not only the commendation of the fans, but some of his seniors among the rival managers of the league.

There is none of the old hysteria, the old confusion, the old hesitation in the play of the present Crackers. They go about their tasks with the drive and spirit of men who know they are not going to be second-guessed or raw-hided before the fans if they pull something wrong.

There is no contempt like that of the ball player for the second-guessing manager. And this is one thing that Eddie Moore will not do. His players

OMAHA SUFFERS FIRST DEFEAT

By Orlo Robertson.

NEW YORK, May 25.—(AP)—The famous stretch drive that carried William Woodward's Omaha to easy victories in the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness failed today as the chestnut son of Gallant Fox bowed to William du Pont's Rosemont in the 60th running of the Withers mile at Belmont park.

Meeting Rosemont for the first time, Omaha found his stretch drive matched stride for stride as he dropped the decision and the purse of $11,250 by one and one-half lengths for his first major defeat of the year. Mrs. Payne Whitney's Plat Eye was another one and one-half lengths to the rear while stretched out behind the three leaders were six other topnotch three-year-olds.

The crowd of 20,000 made Omaha the 1-to-2 choice and as the chestnut flyer swung around the sweeping bend leading into the home stretch it appeared as if their confidence would be justified. The Derby and Preakness winner, running in full stride, had moved up from sixth to third place and was rapidly cutting in on the advantage held by the pace-setting Plat Eye.

He was still third at the turn for home, a quarter of a mile from the judges, but Rosemont, with Wayne Wright riding one of his famous finishes, was winging along in front with one and one-half lengths to spare. Another sixteenth of a mile and Omaha had passed Plat Eye but there was no chance of catching Rosemont.

Showing vast improvement over his previous race, in which he finished a tired second to Plat Eye, Rosemont, held at 8 to 1, answered Omaha's challenge by holding the Woodward colt at bay through the final stages.

The du Pont colt, a son of Porter, reeled off the mile in 1:36 3-5, one and three-fifths seconds slower than Jack High's track record but still the fastest time of the meeting. The second place gave Omaha $1,000 and boosted his earnings for the year to $67,600 and to $71,450 for two years of campaigning.

KELLEY FACES CHAPLIN TODAY IN VOL OPENER

Thomas Holds Barons to Five Hits To Win Finale.

By Jimmy Jones.

A pop-eyed baseball town will awake this morning to consume these welcome tidings along with its cereal and coffee, namely:

1. That our Atlanta Crackers, by taking the Birmingham Barons over the jumps for the third game in a row yesterday, 4-2, while Memphis was losing to Nashville, 4-3, and sagging to third place, forged three and one-half games out in front of the rest of the pack, their closest pursuers now being the Chattanooga Lookouts.

2. Bud Thomas, young righthander, won his seventh game of the season in holding the Barons to five hits.

3. The victory was the Crackers' 13th in 15 games played at home.

4. The Saturday crowd of 4,263 paid admissions gave the team a total draw of 79,007 for the 15 games here.

These are the salient facts which greet you this Sabbath morning.

KELLEY VS. CHAPLIN.

And it may be added that Harry Kelley, who has won 7 and lost 2 despite being plagued with the toothache, has been selected to put the quietus on the Nashville Vols, who are here today to open a four-game series at 3 o'clock.

The Vols, led by the league's stormy petrel, fiery Frank Brazill, have won nine of their last 13 games and pulled up to fourth place. This fact places them in the category of worthwhile opposition and they will fire their heaviest gun, Tiny Jim Chaplin, who is the league's fourth ranking pitcher with six victories and two losses, against the Cracker maestro.

BRAZILL ON FIRST.

Manager Brazill, himself, will play first base, and this fact alone assures a good show, for they say that Frank is protesting everything now from the railroad schedules on down to the umpires' birth certificates. Buck McCormick, the Vols' first baseman, was taken ill and had to be left at home.

Clyde Milan, the Birmingham manager, left here yesterday convinced that the Crackers are the team to lick now if any of the others have their eyes seriously on the honor of finishing first before the Shaughnessey merry-go-round comes along.

CLUB HUSTLING.

"Your boys are hustling and you're getting great pitching," old Deerfoot remarked as he consumed a bottle of soda pop at the concession stand after the game.

Thomas had his change of pace and his fast one working well yesterday and he kept the ball out of the alleys very well indeed. He became a little unsteady at times, but always managed to pull out of it, including the second inning, when he walked Etten and Woodward with two out, only to have Sheriff Harris go back to make a good catch of Epps' high liner, and again in the seventh, when the first two men up hit safely and the third walked. But the hapless Barons could get only one run out of this inning.

The Crackers, meanwhile, were going merrily along their way and picking their openings.

TRIES RIGHT-HANDER.

Milan, after seeing his two aces, Bill Hughes and Abe White, overcome in the series, decided to try Pat Dunaway, the three-fingered right-hander, in the final chance of the series.

Pat, although neither terribly bad nor terribly good, managed to stave off the Crackers until the fourth. "Nig" Lipscomb opened the first with a vicious double past third, advanced to third on Hill's infield out, but was nailed at the plate trying to score on Pinky James' bounder to third.

"Ginger" McCaskill, the rookie catcher from the North Carolina campus, opened the fourth with a sharp double. Buster Chatham was plunked in the back by a pitched ball, and Thomas advanced both with a sacrifice. McCaskill scored while Trapp threw out Lipscomb and Woodward took in Hill's hard liner to end the inning.

CRACKERS SCORE.

The Crackers got an unearned run in the fifth, when Catcher Aubrey Epps, the made-over outfielder, muffed Sheriff Harris' high pop-up in front of the pitcher's box. Hooks scratched a hit past third, his first

Tilden Meets Plaa in Southern Pro Finals This Afternoon

LARGE CROWD WATCHES PLAY OF NET STARS

Today's Matches

Atlanta's first southern professional tennis championship tournament featuring outstanding American and foreign players, ends with the finals this afternoon at the Biltmore Tennis Club.

Today's schedule:

2 O'Clock—Tilden and Plaa in the singles finals.

3:30 O'Clock—Tilden and Hunter versus Ramillon and Plaa in the doubles finals.

Billy Reese, sponsoring the tournament, announces that prices will remain the same, being 55 cents for students, $1.10 general admission and $1.65 box seats.

By Jack Troy.

They'll either have to provide more seats back of the baselines or pass around swivel necks for the spectators out at the Biltmore Tennis Club where the southern professional tennis championship, Atlanta's first, progressed into the finals yesterday.

The folks sitting along the sidelines won't have a chance at the end of today's final matches. That is, if they have been sitting there all along. Because the pros, out for blood and, incidentally, money, have provided to date some of the most breath-taking, neck-stretching tennis ever seen in Atlanta.

It's really a show to see the folks seated on either side of the court follow the volleys and the long rallies. The pros hit the ball so hard that it's not the usual turning of heads right and left required to follow ordinary action. Speed it up about 70 per cent and you have the picture.

So I say it would be a good idea either to provide more seats back of the baselines or pass out swivel necks today as Big Bill Tilden, undoubtedly the world's greatest tennis professional, and Martin Plaa, who was world's champion in 1932, battle in the southern finals at 2 o'clock.

ACCORDING TO FORM.

The tournament has progressed according to form. Bill Tilden said before play began that he was gunning for Plaa and sincerely hoped the French star would survive his bracket. Plaa defeated Tilden in the semi-finals of the Mason and Dixon. Well, Plaa survived all right, although it took him five sets to do it in his brilliant semi-finals match with Bruce Barnes, the Texan, yesterday.

This probably was the outstanding match, although Tilden and Bobby Ramillon offered another semi-finals match that was intensely interesting throughout.

Two hours and 25 minutes after they had taken the court, Plaa and Barnes were still going at it in the fifth and deciding set. Then Plaa went to work on Barnes' service, capitalized on his own and played a forcing game to survive.

It's really the survival of the fittest in the southern championship. So Plaa won from the hard-fighting Mister Barnes by the scores of 4-6, 6-4, 6-2, 4-6, 6-2. It was the only five-set match of the tournament to date. And there is no question that it was the hardest fought.

FIGHT FOR MONEY.

The pros simply don't know when to quit with the top money going to the winner. There were smashing rallies, in which the two stars stood up and batted it out in sensational volleys. Swivel necks would have been very useful because eyes had a hard time following the ball.

There were several love games and in each instance the two players won them on their own services.

Barnes, who defeated Plaa in the finals of the Mason and Dixon tournament, was largely responsible for his own defeat. That is, his percentage of errors was rather high and this was due largely to shots he smashed into the net.

Barnes was a bit off timing in his volleying, it seemed. And the wily Plaa saw to it that he was making gets off balance a good bit of the time in the final set.

Big Bill Tilden, the master strategist of them all, was superb in his match with Bobby Ramillon, however. This match went to four sets with Tilden winning, 7-5, 8-6, 5-7 and 7-5.

TILDEN WINNER.

Facing one of France's greatest professionals, a player who has one of the strongest backhands in modern tennis and a forehand almost as smashing, Tilden drew upon experience and turned back a game and fighting challenger.

There were many who seemed to think that Bill Tilden might lack the speed of other days. He does. He doesn't rush needlessly to the net after drop shots that require a young gazelle to reach. But there is one thing that Bill Tilden has today that many a player would give much to have. And that's the smashing service that saw him ace Ramillon as many as three times in a single game.

The marvel of it was that Ramillon was able to return some of the services. Had you noticed Tilden closely, and maybe you did, you would have seen him squint his eyes when he prepared to put over an extraordinarily hard smash on his service.

Ramillon was forced to wave at several of them. And yet he got some back that the spectators were unable to comprehend. They seemed almost impossible of return.

SWELL BACKHAND.

Ramillon's backhand, into which he puts the extra snap of wrist, will remain the most amazing feature of the play.

He volleys off backhand from the baselines with an accuracy that is astounding. He hits a ball terrifically hard off forehand. It didn't seem possible that Tilden would beat him in such a manner.

There is one thing that will overcome all attributes, however. One player having the edge in this respect will usually triumph. And strategy was Bill Tilden's chief weapon. He had all the shots, of course. And he had the strategy. Ramillon had the form, beautiful form, and the shots. But he couldn't match the master of masters in strategy. So Bill Tilden won.

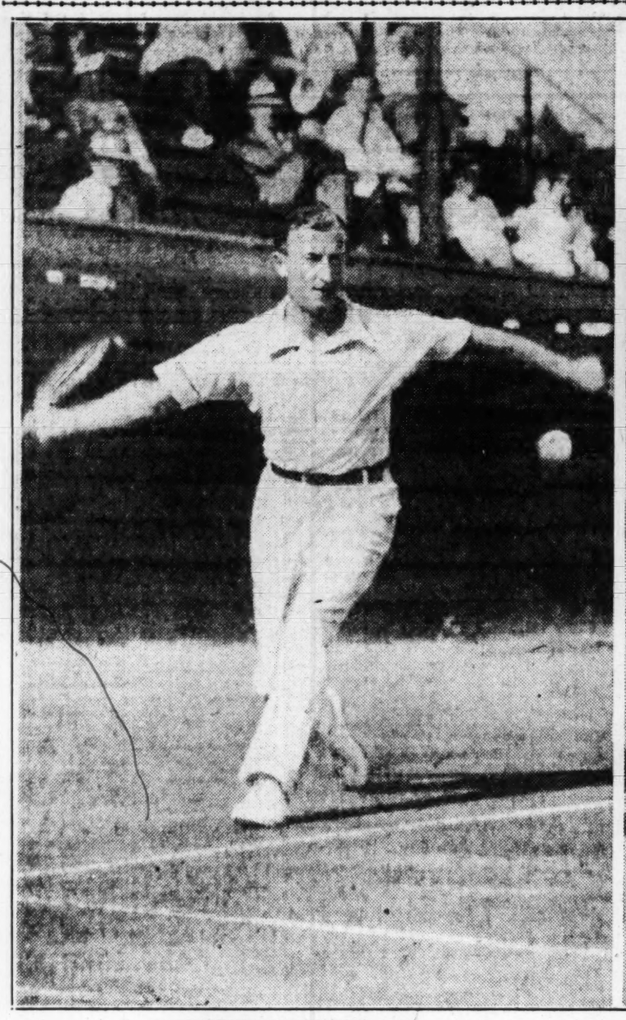

RAMILLON LEADS.

Ramillon got a lead of two games to love in the first set and then he held a lead of four games to two, but he didn't win the set. Tilden pulled out. His strategy was faultless throughout.

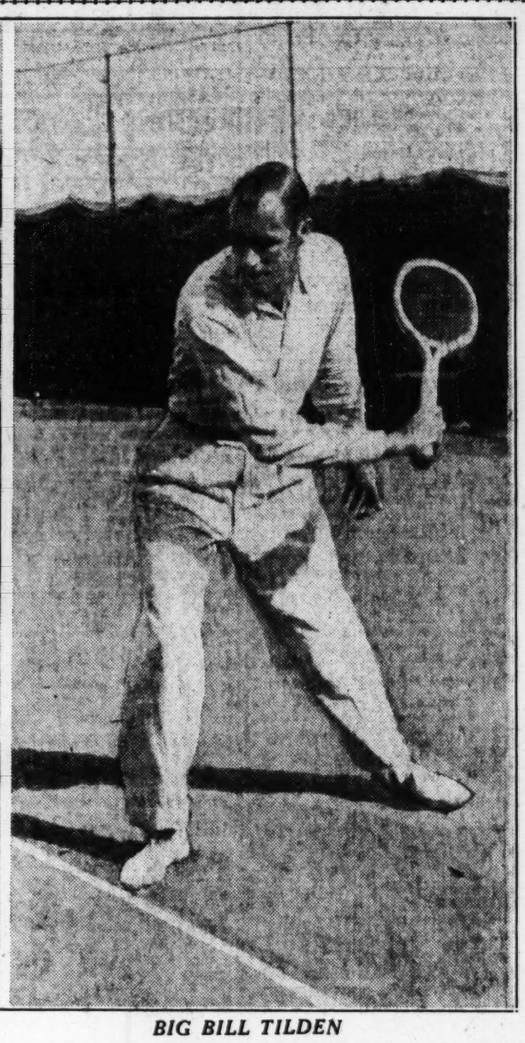

Tilden allowed his temperament to get the best of him at times and he squabbled with the ball boys and the judges on the lines. Ramillon was quite calm. He grinned at mistakes of judgment in calling shots. He once suggested to Tilden that "it would take a line boy with six eyes to see some of them."

It was almost 7 o'clock when Tilden and Hunter and Alfred Chapin and Barnes took the court for their doubles match. They played until darkness, giving a brilliant account of themselves. And Tilden and Hunter won by default. The scores were 6-0, 5-7, 7-5

MARION REESE ENTERS TOURNEY

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 25.—(AP)—The brightest prospects in tennis are expected to participate in the southern boys' and juniors' tournament here June 5-8.

R. D. Potts, tournament chairman, said that play would be on the courts of Southwestern College and that the entrants would be housed in the school's dormitories.

Already entered in the junior event are Louis Faquin, Memphis prep school champion, who pressed Bryan Grant, Davis cup player, in an exhibition match this week; Frank Guernsey, Orlando, Fla.; Billy Westerfield, New Orleans; Russell Bobbitt, Malcolm Manley and Marion Reese, all of Atlanta, and Emil Colmenares, Houston, Texas.

Max Pegram, of Tupelo, Miss., runner-up in the Mississippi state prep meet, will contend for the boys' title.

Down the Alleys

Bowling during the warmer months will show a decided increase at Blick's Bowling Center this summer if the present rate of interest is indicative of the percentage of bowling that may be expected during the next three months.

With five summer leagues already in action and with special events on Saturday evenings the alleys should attract more spectators and bowlers than they have in previous summers.

Perhaps the upward trend in bowling interest during the regular season is somewhat responsible for the kindling of some enthusiasm that is at a near peak at the present time. Whatever it is there is much more interest in organized league bowling this year than in any previous season since the alleys were first opened in Atlanta.

On Monday evenings, the Individual duckpin league, composed of 16 players, bowls regularly for a big cash prize list. It is the first time that a league of this type has ever been tried in the south and from last Monday's scores and general interest it is headed for a big season. For here we find the outstanding bowlers of the city in rare competition with one another on an equal footing. No handicaps are given and each of the three games is bowled separately and counts in the same manner.

Tuesdays the mixed duckpin league, which proved to be so popular last summer with many of the bowlers, is being bowled and 60 per cent of the participants are brand-new bowlers, who previous to bowling in this league had never participated in league games.

Wednesday the Industrial Duckpin league with teams from Station WGST, American Bakeries, Liberty Laundry and American Oil Company are matched in regular order.

Thursday finds the Sunday School Summer league active with teams from Trinity Methodist, Westminster Presbyterian, Peachtree Christian, St. Mark's, Warner Hill's Bible Class, Cascade Avenue Methodist bowling with one another.

On Fridays, the newly organized Merchants' Summer league is scheduled and several of the players who bowled in regular leagues during the winter months are seeking a bit of practice in this loop as they bowl on a competitive basis.

MATCH OFF.

ALBANY, Ga., May 25.—(AP)—The Albany-Valdosta match in the Georgia-Florida Golf league scheduled for yesterday was postponed until June 20, due to illness of a Valdosta team member.

you a personal question. Are you engaged to Max Baer or do you intend to be?"

"I really haven't a thing to say and not a comment to make," she said, very firmly, indeed.

"That," said your reporter, "is the smart thing from your viewpoint but a bit difficult from the news viewpoint.

"I really haven't anything to say," she said.

And so ended the interview.

LAWSON LITTLE'S VICTORY.

Lawson Little was seated in the refreshment room at the Augusta National clubhouse just a few weeks ago. He had finished as low amateur in the Master's golf tournament and sixth in the all-star field.

"Say," he said to Bobby Jones, "you know this tournament has put me right in stride. I think I can go on from here to play good golf in England. This was just what I needed. I'm satisfied. Shooting a 288 for 72 holes on a course like this is good enough golf for me. That's even par and that's good enough. If I win the English amateur it will be because I played in this tournament."

Yesterday Lawson Little, of San Francisco, won the British amateur title, becoming the only American to win the tournament twice in succession. He was hitting his shots well at Augusta and all the pros were eying him with something akin to alarm. He is the first amateur to come along who shows signs of dominating all golf, professional and amateur, as did Bobby Jones.

THAT SHAUGHNESSY SYSTEM.

Well, well, well, our baseball nine seems still to be up there at the head of the pack, a position with which they are rapidly becoming familiar.

And I find a growing change of opinion around our set about the Shaughnessy system, that system of play which admits the first four teams to a play-off which decides the pennant.

The boys were very much against it at the outset, claiming it was bad business and so forth and so on. But now I find, since the Crackers are showing signs of staying at the top, the sentiment is changing. The system isn't bad at all. They rather like it.

The Crackers are making them like it. Already I read where the boys are writing that even if the Crackers win the pennant they likely will lose in the play-off. It seems that the records show that in leagues where the system has been tried the real pennant winner seldom wins the play-off.

Well, at any rate, we are up there at last and I do hope and trust that Manager Eddie Moore and his boys will not let up on the pressure.

Now is the time to let them have both barrels.

THIS TOWN OF OURS.

This town of ours, with the assistance of neighboring cities, has drawn more than 70,000 people into the ball park for 14 games. By the end of the week the club will have drawn probably 100,000 with more than half the season to go.

There is no argument about this and it is not surprising. It was our town which kept going to baseball games in large numbers when the ownership was unworthy of support and when the ball clubs were terrible.

This year they have a splendid ownership, capable men in Earl Mann and Eddie Moore, and a ball club which can play baseball. The test of an organization lies in its ability to meet emergencies. The manner in which the Atlanta organization replaced Harry Taylor with Alex Hooks won the fans completely. They know they have an organization which is giving them value received for their money.

NIGHT BASEBALL.

Cincinnati's night baseball game, the first one in major league history, drew more than 20,000 fans. In addition, it was an errorless game and the visibility for players and spectators, was perfect. The crowd was large despite the fact the weather was cold and threatening rain.

And the fans will be back. This game was the answer. By next year you may expect other major league towns to install lights.

Some of the boys insist on looking at night baseball as a fad. It isn't a fad. It happens to be the answer to new conditions in life, including the present economic condition. It's here to stay

ANZACS DECIDE ON CUP SQUAD

PARIS, May 25.—(AP)—An all-Australia doubles final, calculated to determine to a large extent what combination will represent the Anzacs in the Davis cup play this summer, resulted today from the semi-final and quarter-final play in the French hard court tennis championships.

Young Vivian McGrath, with his two-fisted backhand, and Don Turnbull furnished one team, and the veteran Jack Crawford and Adrian Quist the other.

Both teams found the going strenuous today. McGrath and Turnbull beat Britain's ranking star, Fred Perry, and the youngster, Charles Tuckey, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4, 4-6, 6-4, while Crawford and Quist were eliminating the French pair, A. Martin-Legeay and J. Leseur, 6-4, 3-6, 6-4, 12-10.

HINES, ANDRUS.

Mrs. Dorothy Andrus, of Stamford, Conn., and Wilmer Hines, of Columbia, S. C., saved something for the United States in the doubles play, defeating Katherine Stammer and Frank H. D. Wilde, of Great Britain, 10-8, 6-3, to reach the mixed doubles semi-finals. They meet tomorrow Mme. Henrotin and Martin-Legeay, who beat Mrs. Svend Sperling and Baron Gottfried von Cramm, of Germany, 3-6, 6-3, 6-8.

For the first time in years Jeni Borotra, long a star of the French Davis cup team, failed to reach a doubles semi-final. He and his partner, Mlle. C. Rosambert, lost to the young team of Lolette Payot, Switzerland's ranking woman player, and Marcel Bernard, of France, 6-1, 6-3.

HELEN JACOBS.

Ladies' Night Set At Avondale Arena

Ladies' night will be observed Thursday night at the Avondale open air arena, when ladies accompanied by paid escorts will be admitted free.

"Tarzan" Ben Jordan, claimant to the southern light-heavyweight wrestling title, will headline the card. He will meet Son Almand, of Almand Park. This match is scheduled for a no-time-limit, best-two-out-of-three-falls match.

The semi-windup is a wrestling royal, with four well-known wrestlers making up the match. They are "Totem Pole" Anderson, Alaskan; "Whitie" Patterson, "Little' George and Bob Anderson, Decatur pride. The two remaining grapplers will fight it out in a winner-take-all match.

A four-round boxing bout between Gene Johnson and Roy Queen has been added to the card.

Reserved seats can be obtained in advance by calling Dearborn 4236.

WILL NOT MOVE.

Jesse Hill, Yankee outfielder, refused to move his residence from Newark to New York city until after May 15 this year, wishing to be sure he wouldn't be sent back, again, by the Yanks to the Newark "farm."

Rucker Boosts 'Nig' Lipscomb

Nap Rucker, the ex-Brooklyn scout and star southpaw pitcher, is one observer at Ponce de Leon park who doesn't think that young "Nig" Lipscomb's work at second base is a flash in the pan.

"It is my prediction that he will finish up hitting about as well as he is now, and that the boy is a natural hitter," Nap declared Saturday while watching Lipscomb in infield practice.

Rucker, while scouting for Brooklyn, looked over Lipscomb at Charlotte and several of the present Crackers, including Alex Hooks, the first baseman, when he was playing in the Texas league.

OUTSTANDING HORSES ENTER ATLANTA SHOW

Three-Day Event Will Begin Friday at Fort Mac.

The entry of a number of new horses that have never been shown in an Atlanta ring is adding unusual interest to the sixth annual Atlanta horse show, which opens Friday for a three-day program. For the first time the event will be held at Fort McPherson and will feature a Sunday afternoon show.

Gtorge Gwinn, of Danville, Ky., one of the outstanding judges of fine horseflesh, will judge the saddle classes, and Colonel Herbert Mann, United States cavalry stationed at the University of Georgia, will judge the hunters and jumpers.

The three-day program will include 42 classes, with army entries from Fort McPherson, Fort Benning, Fort Oglethorpe and Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn, Ala., competing with fine saddle classes. Bess, a trick pony that is called the best educated horse in the world, will be put through her paces for 15 minutes daily by her owner, Bert Northrup, an Oklahoma cowboy. An ostrich race, during which two girl jockeys will ride ostriches, will also be featured for 15 minutes each afternoon.

Many Entries.

Headquarters of the association were swamped Saturday when the Roxboro Riding Academy and the Mountain View Stables entered some of the classiest horses seen on the Florida and eastern circuits during the past season.

Hazel McDonald, four-year-old chestnut mare who has made 78 classes since December 15 and has only been out of the money twice, will be one of the outstanding performers in the walk-trot classes. Breezing Through, who has been a consistent winner as a junior throughout the Florida circuit, is looked upon as a very strong contender in the fine harness and junior five-gaited classes. These horses will be capably shown by H. Dye.

Heading the Roxboro entries are such horses as War Path, who comes with a fine record; Avalon, another five-gaited horse to be shown by Fenton Dye; Night Rider, beautiful six-year-old five-gaited horse who has never bene shown in Atlanta ring. The above are from the Roxboro stables.

In addition to the above, Regatta will be shown by Miss Jessie Nunnally in the walk-trot classes and stake. Marvin X and Peter McDonald will be capably shown by Miss Eleanor Clay and Miss Ann Neal Kenan. Mr. and Mrs. James Hardy are entering their horses in various classes throughout the show.

The Roxboro stables, entering approximately 20 events, state their horses are in best condition and will give all competitors a run for their money. The performance particularly of Night Rider will be of great local interest due to his wonderful performances in preliminary rings.

Trysthall Stables.

Outstanding among the new horses that have been entered in the show are three from the Trysthall stables of Maurice Weinberger, in Nashville, Tenn. T. B. Walk , of Chattanooga, Tenn., is bringing three horses. Logan Lewis, of Macon, will show two of his well-known horses, Miss Georgianna, a gray gelding, and Nosegay, a five-gaited bay gelding. From Alabama C. E. Stevens, of Albertville, will send two entries.

A well-known horsewoman who always gets a big hand from the spectators is Mrs. Ernest Kreher, of Tampa, Fla. This year Mrs. Kreher will show her three-gaited chestnut gelding, Peavine's Highland Charm, which has been a consistent winner in the winter shows.

Brilliant Star, an old favorite in the Atlanta ring, will be entered in the three-gaited classes by his owner, R. DeWitt King. Mr. King, Atlanta sportsman, is adding unusual interest to the five-gaited classes this year with his new brown mare, Tip Toe Thru the Daisies, which has not been shown here previously.

The Georgianna stables of T. W. Fletcher, well-known Atlantan, always win many honors in the classes here and this year will be no exception. Mr. Fletcher has entered a number of his fine horses, among them Georgianna Peavine, a gray mare that won the three-gaited championship last year.

OGDEN AND DAUGHTER

The entries of John M. Ogden, another prominent Atlantan, always add color to the show and this year he has two new horses entered. One, Crimson Queen, a chestnut mare, will compete in the three-gaited classes, and the other, My Goodness, a bay mare, will be in the five-gaited classes. Two of Mr. Ogden's horses that have previously been shown here have also been entered. King's Idol, a bay gelding, won the five-gaited championship stake last year; the other, Darling Carlotta, a chestnut mare, has been entered in the five-harness classes.

Mr. Ogden's daughter, Dorothy Mai Ogden, will enter her pony, Sweet Mystery, in the children's horsemanship classes, which she won last year.

Major Trammel Scott and his daughter, Miss Mary Trammell Scott, will add color to the pairs class, the major riding his bay gelding, Top Sargent, and Miss Scott showing her bay mare, Southern Sue. Miss Scott has also entered Southern Sue in the children's horsemanship classes and Mr. Scott will show Top Sargent in the road hack classes.

Bachelor Boy, a three-gaited black gelding owned by Miss Ann McGonigal, will be shown by his owner in the children's horsemanship classes and by Mrs. Virginia Robinson in the ladies' horsemanship classes. Miss McGonigal has also entered Pepper, a three-gaited black pony, in the pony classes.

CHEERFUL CHARLEY.

Frank Adair has entered Cheerful Charley, a chestnut gelding, in the three-gaited classes and Mr. Adair has entered Impress in the mare and colt class.

Lotty's Sport, a roan gelding, has been entered in the five-gaited classes by his owner, Homer Thompson.

Offering keen competition in the parent and child class will be Herbert D. Oliver, president of the Atlanta Horse Show Association, and his daughter, Miss Jean Oliver. Miss Oliver, who is one of the best known young riders in the south, will enter Cheer Leader in various horsemanship classes. She has been a winner in the various southern shows during the winter.

Captain T. E. Boudinot, of the cavalry, will enter the Atlanta show for the first time and will be on Brown Eyes, an old-timer in the Atlanta ring. Captain Boudinot, who only recently came to Fort McPherson, is noted as one of the best riders in the service. He is captain of the Fort Mac horse show team.

The old favorite of the crowd, Tony, will again be on hand and will be ridden by Captain A. G. Wing. Tony is called the horse with personality and always gets a great hand on every appearance. Lieutenant S. M. Sanford, one of the coming riders in army circles, will be on Hartshorn. A large number of officers and women from the post will enter the various events for hunters and jumpers.

ELEVEN FROM FORT.

Eleven horses from Fort Benning have been entered, among them Blue Point, a gray mare that won first in the hunters' class last year; Howdy, a chestnut gelding that placed second in the officers' charger class last year, and Middleburg, a brown gelding, winner of the touch and out in 1934.

A large number of talented young Atlanta children have entered the various pony and children's horsemanship classes.

Handsome silver trophies will be given winners and in addition the prize money has been increased 50 per cent over last year's.

The details of the horse show are being handled by the executive manager, Major Reese M. Howell, and the officers of the Atlanta Horse Show Association; Major General George Van Horn Moseley, chairman of the executive committee; Herbert D. Oliver, president; Major Trammell Scott, executive vice president; Robert W. Woodruff, vice president; Walter Candler, secretary, and Captain Theodore Goulsbu, treasurer.

Identify Defeated In Handicap Race

ROCKINGHAM RACE PARK, SALEM, N. H., May 25.—(AP)—Arthur Gwynne Vanderbilt's 4-year-old chestnut colt, Identify, a lopsided favorite to win the New Hampshire handicap at Rockingham park this afternoon, went down to defeat before a stunned crowd of 30,000 as J. W. Y. Martin's Dark Hope, a 6-year-old brown gelding, won the mile and one-sixteenth battle.

Dark Hope, an 18-1 shot, edged into a slight lead at the head of the stretch and after a hard ride by Jockey J. Kacala, held the charging Lynx Eye safe, winning by a neck despite the stretch splurge of the R. Robertson horse. P. M. Pike's Teralice snatched third position.

Dark Hope paid $38.20, $20.40, $8.80 across the board.

of the game, and Manager Moore came through with a hard double to left to score Harris.

The Crackers did away with Dunaway in the seventh on Hill's single, James' sacrifice and Hooks' double—almost a duplicate of the one he hit against the rightfield sign wall to win Friday night's game.

Clarence (Pop) Griffin, the wee left-hander, who used to be so much arsenic to the Crackers, while with Memphis, pitched the eighth and allowed another run on Chatham's walk. Thomas' bunt, which went for a hit, Lipscomb's sacrifice, which sent him to third, and Hill's fly to right.

JUGGLES LINEUP.

Milan shook up his lineup in an effort to overcome the Cracker jinx, placing Dixie Howell on second and sending Woodward, who helped lose Friday night's game for failure to cover second, to left field. Howell played a fine game at second, but otherwise the combination was futile.

Johnny Hill, with a nice play on Malinosky's bid for a hit in the eighth, and two catches by Harris, who is delighting the right-field galleries with his fielding, were Cracker highlights.

Manager Moore had Jim Lindsey in the bull pen warming up, but didn't have to call on him.

One of the bright features of the Crackers' home stay is the rise in Buster Chatham's batting average. By getting a single in two official times up yesterday, the little guy climbed above .300. Buster is playing great ball in the field, also.

Nashville is here through Wednesday and then "Mule" Shirley, now restored to Joe Engel's good graces, brings his Chattanooga Lookouts here for three games, ending Saturday. The Crackers then leave for New Orleans on a week's road trip.

SMITHIES RETAIN PREP GOLF TITLE

SILVER SHOOT TODAY AT FORT

A silver target shoot for members of the West End Gun Club and their friends will be held today at the national guard rifle range at Fort McPherson. The shoot will start at 9 o'clock and continue all day.

As an added attraction on the program, Benson Freeman Jr., P. M. Gilbert and H. L. White will shoot for a ham. They finished in a tie last Sunday for first prize in Class A. Dr. LeRoy Childs and Charles Pyron will shoot for the top prize in Class B of last Sunday's shoot. They also finished all square last Sunday morning.

Silver-plated replicas of the target used for skeet shooting purposes will be awarded in Class A, B and C. The high gun in each class will receive these trophies, which will be engraved with the shooter's name and event on each one. Shooters will be classified by their former averages made at the club.

A three-way tie in last week's Class C program will be decided in the afternoon between W. S. Paris, Harry Harkins and Roy Stephens.

The afternoon program will also consist of an exhibition squad of expert shooters in rapid fire. A "miss and out" shoot will also be included in the afternoon program.

Babe Hits Three Home Runs and Single, But Braves Lose, 11 to 7

CARDS MOVE UP TO THIRD PLACE AS CUBS LOSE

NEW YORK, May 25.—(UP)—The professional mourners, who, during the last few weeks, have been busily engaged in writing epitaphs on the baseball career of Babe Ruth, were confounded today when the Sultan of Swat rounded out the best batting effort of the major league season.

He poled out three homers, inserted a single between them, and drove in six runs, for as perfect a day at bat as he has ever enjoyed. His second homer cleared the roof of the right field stands, a feat never before accomplished in Forbes field. The trio of four-baggers boosted his total to six, while his batting average was elevated from .145 to .203.

In spite of Ruth's feat, the Pittsburgh Pirates vanquished the Boston Braves, 11 to 7. Tommy Thevenow's triple with two on, and his double with the bases full, played the major part in the Pirates' victory.

PITCHING DUEL.

Carl Hubbell flashed winning form today as he set the Chicago Cubs down with four hits, while the New York Giants eked out a 3-to-2 win. Joe Moore accounted for what proved to be the winning marker, when he homered in the first half of the ninth. Lon Warneke was the pitching victim.

The Cubs' defeat dropped them to fourth place, while the St. Louis Cardinals, climbed up a notch to third by virtue of a 10-to-3 triumph over the Brooklyn Dodgers. Casey Stengel's athletes were in possession of a three-run lead when the fifth started, but a Cardinal five-run attack on Johnny Babich wiped it out in the last half.

Al Thomas, veteran American leaguer, made his debut in the National league today and was cheated of a victory when Ernie Boland muffed a fly and paved the way for the Cincinnati Reds' 4-to-3 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

YANKS WIN TWO.

The New York Yankees celebrated the playing of their first double-header of the year by taking both games from the St. Louis Browns, and moving up into second position. The scores were 3 to 1 and 8 to 7. "Sugar" Cain and Charley "Red" Ruffing engaged in a pitcher's duel in the opener with Ruffing driving in the first of the winning markers with a double in the seventh. In the nightcap Ed Coleman, recent acquisition from the Athletics, who has been thumping them all over the lot for Rogers Hornsby, came up with the bases loaded in the ninth inning and gave the Browns a one-run lead by poling out his second homer of the game. The Yanks came right back in their half, tying the score on errors by Clift and West, and winning when Tony Lazzeri singled with the bases loaded. Burns, Gehrig and Dickey homered.

The Cleveland Indians and Philadelphia Athletics divided a twin-bill, with the Tribe taking the opener, 9 to 6, while Connie Mack's crew came back behind Bill Dietrich to take the nightcap, 6 to 1. The first game went into extra innings, with the Indians winning out in the tenth when they jumped on Joe Cascarella for four runs. In the second game, Dietrich bested Willis Hudlin and Clint Brown, being deprived of a shutout when Vosmik tripled with a man on base in the eighth.

GREENBERG HOMERS.

Hank Greenberg's 9th home run of the season, with a man on base, enabled the Detroit Tigers to nose out the Boston Red Sox, 3 to 2, and lifted them into the first division. The Sox dropped to fifth, the spot vacated by Detroit. Tommy Bridges was on the mound for Detroit and gave up seven hits, the same number the Tigers made off Ostermueller, Welch and Hockette.

The Chicago White Sox hammered out 14 hits off Linke, Pettit, Russell, and Bean, while Carl Fischer was limiting the Washington Senators to six, to give the former an 8-to-3 victory. The Sox put the game away in the first when they tallied four times and were never headed.

(Associated Press Photos.)

Lawson W. Little, of San Francisco, who played recently in Georgia in the Master's tournament at Augusta where he was low amateur, yesterday won the British amateur title, which he had won the year before. He became the first American to win the tournament twice in succession and is the third man in all the tournament's history to score two such victories. Little said, after shooting even par for four rounds at Augusta, that if he won in England it would be because of his preparation at Augusta. He is shown above with the American amateur cup and at the left in action.

MORRIS BEATS DAN SAGE, 2-1

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 25.—Creating a sensation in the early stages of his semi-final match, Dan Sage, of Atlanta, failed to maintain his mastery over Old Man Par this morning and lost to Johnny Morris, 2 and 1. Morris went on to annex the twenty-fourth Invitation tournament by defeating Gene Vinson, the Meridian, Miss., mauler by 4 and 2.

Sage shot into a spectacular 2-up lead on the first two holes, scoring spectacular birdies that made the great gallery desert the Vinson-Dreyfus semi-final. The word flashed like magic that Sage was "hot" and certain to beat his sub-par qualifying round.

DAN LOSES LEAD.

But the Atlanta boy's lead was short-lived as Morris ran down a nifty putt for a birdie 2 on 4. They halved the 5th with par 5's and on the next hole Sage again grazzed a 2-up margin, playing a beautiful No. 4 wood hole high on his second shot. Morris pulled to the left of the carpet, chipped short and two-putted.

Sage's golf up to and through the 7th hole was mechanical and spectacular. But he began losing control on the 8th and 9th, and the luck that had been with him deserted him entirely. A pushed tee shot on No. 8 started his trouble and a similar mistake occurred on 9, but in the confusion created by an excited gallery he did not learn the ball was out until he had walked up the fairway. He retraced his steps and hooked his second tee shot 280 yards behind an oak tree that gave him a dead stymie. He hit a low hooking roller that struck the green and skidded across the edge.

EVEN AT TURN.

After Morris caught the Atlantan at the turn they alternated the honors until a perfect par 4 on the 415-yard 16th slammed the door in Sage's face. He gave the galleries, who braved a scorching sun, something to shout about when his niblick recovery on the par 5 12th enabled him to chalk up a birdie 4. All the way, Sage displayed a magic touch with his niblick.

Sage, out	325	354	555—37
Morris, in	535	334	444—35—72

Paul Donehoo, Atlanta's Blind Coroner, Seldom Misses Game

Most Remarkable Fan

By Jimmy Jones.

The other afternoon we had the pleasure of meeting the best baseball fan in Atlanta—and the good ones are numbered by the thousands.

He is Paul Donehoo, Fulton county's famous coroner. And the reason he is the best baseball fan in Atlanta is because, though deprived of that most precious gift of the baseball spectator or anyone else, namely, vision, he has missed only three or four ball games the Crackers have played at Ponce de Leon park in over two years!

We thought of this and many things as we sat in Mr. Donehoo's company, talking about baseball, as the late afternoon sun streamed in through the big windows of his office down at the county courthouse. And how really fortunate are we individuals who complain of petty ailments and life's trivia.

We marveled also, at his keen knowledge of the game. But Mr. Donehoo, who has been Fulton county's coroner for 27 years and conducted many hundreds of inquests during that time did not see anything so remarkable about it.

"Many people who are totally blind enjoy baseball," explained, as he sat there chatting easily and puffing on his pipe. "I, myself, have been a fan for 34 years and I enjoy baseball and checkers more than anything else."

Mr. Donehoo revealed that his interest in baseball dated back to 1901 when he was a student at Mercer University in Macon and Judge Will Gunn, father of Watts Gunn, the golfer, was the star pitcher of the college team.

ORGANIZED TEAM.

"Mercer had a good team in those days. I became interested and began going to games. And when I came back home to Adamsville, the little town where I lived, I helped organize a team of country boys and we played all around the state."

Coroner Donehoo lost his eyesight in May, 1891, following an attack of meningitis. But he has enjoyed life to its fullest and developed his other faculties to such an extent that blindness is little of a handicap. It has made him a philosopher and better man, he says.

Going to baseball games is only one of his diversions, but it is easily one of his favorites. And he is not only a fan, but a close student of the game. He keeps up with the players' averages and discusses them with many friends. He knows all the Cracker players by name, and what they are hitting.

HOW HE DOES IT.

We asked him how he managed to get such a kick out of the game when he couldn't see any of the players or its principals.

He explained that he usually attended the games with a party of his cronies and that they sat together along the third base line. He said that he had rather go out to the games than hear them over the radio.

"I know what's going on by the reaction of the crowd and the sounds. It is easy to tell how the game is going that way, even if you cannot see it. But the reaction is not always good when the umpires are wrong," he said.

Mr. Donehoo has his own system of gauging a pitcher's effectiveness. He keeps up with the number of balls he throws in each inning. If Harry Kelley or one of the older pitchers is working he does not worry if he throws more than the usual number of balls early in the game. But if it happens to be one of the youngsters, Coroner Donehoo begins to worry. It is a sign that the young man may be losing control.

The late Christy Mathewson was his ideal as a pitcher because he wasted very few balls in a game. Mathewson, he pointed out, once threw only 48 balls in a complete 9-inning game.

Harry Kelley is his favorite of the Cracker pitchers for the same reason. Kelley rarely walks a hitter and usually makes him hit the ball he wants, he pointed out.

Coroner Donehoo also is a great admirer of Harry Taylor, the Crackers' injured first baseman. He likes Hooks, his successor, all right but thinks that Harry deserves to get his job back because of the way he has hustled for the Crackers. Mr. Donehoo is a great believer in his favorites.

He was asked to name his favorite ball player of all time. Without the slightest hesitation, Coroner Donehoo named Tyrus Raymond Cobb, the Georgia Peach. Cobb was his idea of an aggressive ball player who played to win.

"Steamboat" Johnson is his favorite umpire. He likes the Steamer's pep and last year presented him with a whisk broom with which to dust off the plate in the Steamer's own inimitable style.

While the Crackers and their fortunes constitute Mr. Donehoo's chief interest, he also follows the major leagues, but not until late in the season. He claims that no one can tell about the major league races this time of year and is probably right.

FOLLOWS SERIES.

He also follows the World Series closely and thinks that Manager Frankie Frisch, of the Cardinals, pulled one of the prize boners of series history when he allowed "Dizzy" Dean, his best pitcher, to go in as a pinch runner in the last series.

"Dizzy" was subsequently beaned by a thrown ball and it served him and Frisch right for taking such a chance, the coroner stated.

Very soon, Coroner Donehoo will go to Baltimore to attend his daughter's graduation from Goucher, the famous girl's school. He also has been invited to address the downtown Lions Club of that city while there. He is a widely-known and highly respected man, is Fulton county's coroner.

It was humbling and inspiring to talk to him about baseball. And the writer left his presence with a higher appreciation of that game and the game of life.

LITTLE CAPTURES SECOND STRAIGHT

the green, with two yawning traps in between. It took the marshals fully five minutes to move the crowd back to permit Little to get a free swipe at the ball. He chose a spade mashie, lobbed the pellet beautifully to clear the traps and it came to rest on the green 28 feet from the hole. Tweddell planted his approach three feet inside Little's.

That recovery had a revitalizing effect on the champion. For the first time during the final match he smiled. He took less time than usual in lining up the putt and then rolled the ball "stone dead" for a sure 4, putting the pressure on Tweddell and, as it turuned out, blighting the challenger's hopes. Facing the most difficult operation of his career, the medico saw his 25-foot putt, which made would have taken the match at least an extra hole, slide past the cup. Ruefully but grinning, Tweddell tapped Little's ball into the cup and conceded defeat.

The gallery, which had cheered Tweddell's magnificent uphill fight, cheered equally loud for the victorious Californian.

Older members of the Royal and Ancient who have seen every championship final of the past 33 years declared it was the most breath-taking match in their memory. Several old codgers appeared choked up and only could shake Little's hand in silence as he changed the clothes which he had worn throughout the turbulent, wind-swept tournament.

"I was afraid to change them for fear of breaking my luck," smiled Little.

Little, who has the faculty of saying the right thing in a foreign land, won the hearts of the crowd gathered to witness the presentation when he extolled Tweddell's pluck and sportsmanship, calling him "one of the finest sportsmen I have played" and then, in an aside, "I'm glad we ran out of holes when we did."

FOURTH TIME.

The Californian, who had his introduction to golf in Tientsin, China, on links built on the site of a cemetery 11 years ago, made it the fourth time an American homebred has won the British title. Jess Sweetser was the first to do it in 1926, followed four years later by Bob Jones. Neither went back to defend it. Besides Little, H. G. Hutchinson won the crown two straight years in 1886-87 and Harold Hilton in 1900-01.

The story of the final duel was one of excellent golf played under trying conditions. It was the windiest day of a windy week and the marshals needed five minutes on almost every hole to clear the crowds either from the fairway or the green so the competitors could play. Even though the morning round saw Little shoot a 73—four over par—against his rival's 76 to go three up, at intervals it was felt and proven that Tweddell had some shots left in his bag.

Little established his lead on the first four holes and protected it on the back nine with five of the most prodigious drives ever belted in major competition in this country. His tee shots averaged more than 300 yards on the 10th, 11th, 13th, 15th and 18th holes. While Little was almost knocking the cover off the ball, the doctor was sometimes as much as 60 yards behind but made up with long and accurate irons.

TOUGH SCRAP.

If there was any doubt that Little had a scrap on his hands it was erased at the outset in the afternoon when the slightly portly physician, who captained the 1928 British Walker cup team which made an unsuccessful invasion of the United States, won the first two holes and would have squared the match at the 21st but for the fact his approach putt hit Little's ball.

Little held a lead of three up through the 26th but from there on he encountered a brand of golf that required all his iron nerves could withstand. From the 27th hole, on which he shot a birdie 4 two after narrowly missing an ace, through the 30th on which he squared the match, Tweddell's scores were 2-4-3-3, four under fours and two under regulation figures. Little found himself in the position of shooting 3-4-4-4 yet losing three holes.

From that point Little began to show why he's the king-pin of amateurs. He propelled his great woods far past Tweddell and won the 32d and 33d, sank a 15-footer for a half in fours at the 34th to take the advantage which led to victory. As in the morning Tweddell shot the back nine in 36 for a round of 76, while Little carded 41-37—78.

Mac Smith, Still Hopeful, To Try Again

NASHVILLE, Tenn., May 25.—(AP)—With a bag full of good shots and the same old perseverance, MacDonald Smith is going to the national open at Oakmont next month again in quest of the major title that has passed him by so many times.

MAC DONALD SMITH

Despite the Scot's handsome collection of runners-up trophies, won by years of campaigning on the sun-baked fairways of the world, Smith looks to his next test without a trace of a psychological handicap, declaring himself "mentally and physically" fit.

Smith is spending a few days here supervising activities in his golf club plant before leaving for the open meet near Pittsburg.

The Perennial runner-up laid aside his hickory shafts long enough to say that "golf writers were justified in writing that I was and am hounded by a hoodoo. I am almost invariably among the low scores yet I have not crashed through in one of the major fixtures." He didn't mention that in the national open last year he was only three strokes behind the winner.

But he said he placed no credence whatever in such supersittion because "I can look back over every tournament I have failed to win and see that partially and wholly missed shots" hurt his chances.

Reminded that Gene Sarazen had said he would be satisfied with a 292, Smith replied that 301 was good enough to win the last open tourney at Oakmont.

He refused to estimate what the title-winning score would be, saying that naming the score or the winner would be an unadulterated guess.

Oakmont, he said, was "one of the fairest tests in the world," explaining that "you cannot be even a little bit off your mark—you miss even half of a shot and it might cost you money."

Smith figures that the "breaks" in the open at Oakmont will play a much smaller part than they have in many major tournaments.

"There is no such thing as committing an error there," he asserted, "and then having it righted by a whim of the course."

OWENS BREAKS 4 WORLD MARKS

By William Weeks.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., May 25.—(AP)—Jesse Owens, spectacular Ohio State negro, gave one of the most amazing demonstrations of versatility in track and field history today as he shattered three world's records and equalled a fourth to dominate the 35th annual Western conference meet.

Michigan won its 14th team championship, but instead of a runaway as had been expected, had to battle Owens and Ohio State down to the last event for the decision. The Wolverines amassed 48 points to 43 1-2 for the Buckeyes.

Owens climaxed his great afternoon's performance with a leap of 26 feet 8 1-4 inches in the broad jump, a new world mark.

Even without the astonishing leap which set him off in a class by himself as the all-time greatest broad jumper, the incomparable 21-year-old sophomore still would have turned in an almost matchless day.

Before surpassing the accepted world record of 26 feet 2 1-8 inches for the jump, set by Chuhei Nambu, of Japan, in 1931, Owens tied Frank Wykoff's world 100-yard dash standard of 9.4 seconds.

After his jump he raced to spectacular world record-smashing triumphs in the 220-yard dash and the 220-yard low hurdles. Running by himself after the first few strides, he finished the furlong in 20.3 seconds. The performance was three-tenths of a second under Roland Locke's world record, shaded Locke's American mark of 20.5, and beat Ralph Metcalfe's collegiate mark of 20.4 seconds.

Apparently just as fresh as when he started, Owens completed his conquest of records by winning the low hurdles in 22.6 seconds, four-tenths of a second under the listed world standard held jointly by Charles Brookins, of Iowa, and Norman Paul, Southern California ace.

These four almost matchless victories more than equalled the splendid performance of the late Carl Johnson, of Michigan, who startled the track world by winning the high and broad jumps and both hurdles events in the 1919 championship meet.

Owens' records will be offered for adoption as world marks. He did not use starting blocks and the wind, brisk at first, died down.

On the Links

Frank Boyce and Major Graham Johnson, with 69 net, share first place in the qualifying rounds for the annual Presidents' trophy tournament on the Druid Hills course. Bill Terrell, with a 74, is low gross.

The qualifying will end today with match play scheduled to open Monday afternoon. One week will be given over to each round of play.

Other low net scores are: Rufus King, 71; Ray Menke, 78; L. D. McMath, 72; Jack King, 74; Edgar Farrell, 75; Dr. L. M. White, 71; Dr. M. D. Huff, 75; Arthur Mims, 72; Gordon Freeman, 83; W. A. Holbrook, 74; C. M. Bowden, 71; Jim Wilson, 70; Garrison Ballenger, 75; Bill Terrell, 72; J. L. Brooks, 71; Jim Clark, 72; George Coates, 75; Jesse Draper, 78; Jess Robbins, 74; J. O. Knight, 72; Henry Young, 74, and Bill Vose, 76.

In the regular weekly blind bogey for Druid Hills players, 10 players shared top prize with scores of 74. Those tied were Clarence Bradley, H. H. Jones, R. A. Phelps, J. F. Settle, C. M. Bowden, C. J. Holditch, Graham Johnson, Ellis Fite and Snap McCord.

on the green in three. Miss Miley was on in two with a neat approach shot. The defending champion failed to make a long putt from the far side of the green and three-putted, giving Miss Miley the hole with a par 4.

Again the titlist went into the rough, driving off the 13th tee and was on the green in four against three for Miss Miley who had well-placed drives and an approach shot that brought applause from the gallery. Miss Jameson faced a 25-foot putt to keep in the running, but she overshot the cup and Miss Miley took two putts to win the hole with a par 5 against Betty's six. With Miss Miley the victor, 6 and 5, Miss Jameson smilingly congratulated her.

Miss Jameson lost by the same score she eliminated Miss Estelle Lawson, of Chapel Hill, N. C., the North-South champion, in the quarter finals. She was badly off her game but Miss Miley played her best game of the tournament so far.

KIRBY'S MATCH.

In the other semi-final match, the serious-faced, bobbed-hair Georgia youngster, although trailing all the way, shot with the steadiness of a veteran and betrayed not a sign of nervousness. Miss Rogers' face, however, frequently mirrored her hopes and distresses, although her more consistent playing kept her in a gay mood most of the time. Miss Kirby said not a word but Miss Rogers frequently urged on the ball with a brief cry after her shots or gave a shout of dismay if the ball missed the mark.

Off to a poor start, Miss Kirby slicing and Miss Rogers topping the ball, the Florida champion took an immediate lead when her opponent dubbed a brassie shot. Miss Rogers won the hole with a par 5, against Miss Kirby's 6. Overshooting the second green with her iron shot, Miss Rogers made a good recovery to score a par 4 while Miss Kirby had one over par. Both driving about 200 yards from the third tee, they reached the green 556 yards away on even terms and each took two putts to halve the hole with par five's.

STYMIE.

Miss Rogers laid her opponent a stymie on the fourth green and won the hole with a par 3, giving her a 3-up lead. Halving the fifth with par fives, Miss Rogers three-putted at the sixth green and Miss Kirby won the hole with a par 5. They halved the next two holes with par fives. Miss Rogers got into difficulty at the ninth green where her drive went to the right of the green.

Miss Kirby landed on the edge with her iron shot for the short distance. Miss Rogers overshot in an attempt to recover and landed in the sandtrap on the opposite side. The Georgian won the hole with a par 3 and was one down at the turn. Both players were out in 43, or three over par.

Miss Kirby three-putted on the tenth green and Miss Rogers won the hole with a par 5. At the 11th green Miss Rogers thrilled the gallery by sinking an 18-foot putt to score a birdie and take a 3-up lead. At the next hole both shot par fours.

On the 13th fairway Miss Kirby recovered from the rough after a good drive and appeared to have a temporary advantage after a beautiful approach shot. Miss Rogers' long putt rimmed the cup and they halved the hole with par fives.

INCREASES LEAD.

The Florida champion increased her lead to four at the 14th after the Georgia girl overshot a short putt, giving Miss Rogers the hole with a par 5.

The Georgia lass barely missed a birdie at the 15th green when her eight-foot putt rimmed the cup. She had driven to the green across a deep ravine. Miss Rogers had a good approach shot but it hit her opponent's ball for a stymie and lost her the hole.

Miss Rogers ended the match spectacularly. Her splendid approach shot, which rimmed the cup and stopped only two inches away, amazed the gallery. Her drive down the 160-yard 16th fairway had stopped about 15 yards short of the green. Miss Kirby also had a good approach shot but the ball stopped at a difficult putting distance. Since she only needed to halve the hole to win the match, Miss Rogers conceded the long putt.

RUFF RETURNS FOR KEY MATCH

Tiny Ruff, who tries usually to live up to his name, is returning to Atlanta much to the delight of many followers of the grunt and growl profession.

Ruff has appeared here many times in the past and always pleased the fans. He is a fellow who likes his work and who never fails to give his best in the ring. He likes to tackle the boys who call themselves tough and show them just how tough they should be. Ruff likes to play rough and is a glutton for punishment.

Louise LaChene, the French-Canadian, who meets Ruff in the feature of Monday night's mat card at the James L. Key arena, is something of a rough customer himself, as fans who have seen him in action know, but he has not met anyone like Ruff since he came to Atlanta. LaChene is considered one of the best in his class and is a capable and accomplished worker but he will have his hands full when he goes against Old Man Ruff himself. He will think he is in a rough house by the time the match is halfway through.

This match heads a card of four bouts. In the semi-windup, Tarzan Jordan, Atlanta's favorite son of the mat, will tackle Totem Pole Anderson, Alaskan grappler. Jordan at last gets a crack at Anderson and he is expected to stage one fine battle.

Sammy Miller and Young Londos, two boys who believe in plenty of fight and action, will meet in the other preliminary match. Both are well known here and fans know they will see a match full of action and excitement.

The opening match will bring together Lou Bartell, the Jewish grappler and Jow Willard. They will meet at 8:30 o'clock.

Promoters Roby and Bettis are looking forward to a great crowd. Tickets are on sale at the Five Points Soda Company and at Main 2539.

Sauer and Mahmout Feature Weber Card

Atlanta fans will have another opportunity to see Pete Sauer, the bronze California giant who is only a couple of knocks away from the world's wrestling championship door.

Last week Sauer made a brilliant showing here, turning back George Koverly in the feature match of Henry Weber's card.

The fans liked the match so well that Weber decided to bring Sauer back against another foe fully as colorful and perhaps a bit tougher.

So Youseff Mahmout, the Terrible Turk, will be the foe of the bronze giant this Wednesday. It will headline a splendid card.

In the supporting match, Koverly will return to meet George Kirchmyer, who has proved very popular. They're both outstanding wrestlers.

The feature match will have a 90-minute limit while the semi-windup will be for one hour.

A match of much interest to Atlantans will be the opener in which Marshall Blackstock, the Atlanta boy, engages Chief Chewacki, who once fought Maxie Baer as Gypsy Daniels, the boxer, and knocked Baer out.

Gypsy Daniels almost lost his identity. He bobbed up as Chief Chewacki and as such he has become one of the most colorful matmen in the game. There is no trick of the trade that is not known to Chewacki. He uses them all. He enrages the fans but they like to see him in action.

WINTER PARK, Fla., May 25.—(AP)—Hillsborough High, of Tampa, today won the Florida High school baseball championship, by shutting out the Tigers from Andrew Jackson, of Jacksonville, 6 to 0.

JIM CALHOUN WINS GOBLET

An extra shoot was required to determine the winner of the silver goblet at the weekly skeet shoot of the Capitol Gun Club Saturday when Jimmy Calhoun and Tom Cassels tied in the regular match.

Cassels lost the second shoot and the goblet to Calhoun, 24 to 23, after aiming accurately for 50 straight in tying Calhoun. Calhoun had shot a 52 out of 50, he having a three handicap against Cassells' handicap of two.

Incidently Cassells' string of 50 straight ran his consecutive hit total up to 100 as he had made an equal number of markers the previous week.

Other scores in the various shoots were as follows:

SKEET.

E. B. Freeman, 50x50; Ed Wight, 49x50; J. K. Orr Jr., 48x50; H. L. White, 47x50; Guy Melchor, 47x50; Dr. LeRoy Childs, 45x50; F. L. Magoon, 43x50.

TRAP AT 16 YARDS.

C. W. Tway, 25x25; L. E. Grant, 23x25; E. B. Freeman, 22x25; Jack Tway, 22x23; F. L. Magoon, 20x20.

HANDICAP.

L. E. Grant, 25x25; E. B. Freeman, 22x25; Jack Tway, 22x25; C. W. Tway, 20x25. F. L. Magoon broke 19 from 21 yards.

Debutantes Bowl Monday Morning

The Debutante Club of Atlanta will hold a duckpin sweepstakes at Blick's Bowling Center on Monday morning at 11 o'clock.

All members of the Debutante Club are invited to participate in the bowling and Miss Louisa Robert, president of the club, urges all of the members to take part in this novel contest.

Although the subdebs had a bowling sweepstakes a few weeks ago, it is the first time that the debutantes have attempted a bowling tournament. Three games will be bowled, beginning at 11 o'clock. No entry fee is to be charged, only pay the cost of the games to be bowled.

A trophy will be presented to the winner who has the high score at the end of the three games Monday morning. No registration is necessary; just come up and bowl on the alleys reserved for the group of young ladies in the Debutante Club.

TRAVEL and RESORT NEWS

NORTHERN PACIFIC OFFERS NEW TYPE OF CIRCLE TOURS

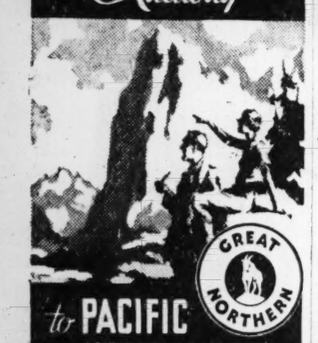

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 25.—Low-cost circle tours through the west, designed to place upon railroad trains tourists who use the highways, are being offered by the Northern Pacific Railway and associated lines this coming summer, according to E. E. Nelson, passenger traffic manager.

Circle tours through western United States, at less than 2 cents a mile, including transportation, meals, sightseeing, hotels and incidental expenses, are conducted not only to stimulate travel, but to induce average Americans to leave their family cars at home and take the train, Mr. Nelson said.

"For parties of two or even three persons, the low-cost circle tours through the west, some of them selling for as low as 1.6 cents a mile for all expenses, and others for not more than 2 cents a mile, will have convincing appeal, we believe," he continued.

Rainier Stands as Lofty Guide to Sailors Far at Sea

'RAILROAD WEEK' TO BE OBSERVED THROUGHOUT U. S.

CHICAGO, May 25.—A whirlwind of enthusiastic approval and pledges of co-operation throughout 24 states of the Union have been the immediate results of an announcement that railroad week would be celebrated June 10 to 15, it was announced here today.

Chairman Harry G. Taylor, of the Western Association of Railroad Executives, pointed to his desk, heaped with telegrams and letters from businessmen, heads of trade organizations and other leaders in scores of cities and towns. Each of these, he explained, breathed a spirit of co-operation to make railroad week the most spectacular celebration in America's transportation history.

The iron horse will not only be "at home" in spick-and-span roundhouses to the public during that week, but will lift its voice in the most tremendous salvo of whistles heard since the first Armistice Day. The locomotive "chorus" will be heard from the Great Lakes to the Pacific ocean and from Alaska to the Rio Grande river on the opening day of railroad week at an hour later to be set.

Motor Trip Around Mediterranean Proves Breathtaking in Its Beauty

By WILLIAM C. GARNER

CONSTANTINE, French Algeria, and More Than One-Third of the Way Across Africa, March 24, 1935 (By Mail)—See Naples and die, is an old byword.

Naples is supposed to be of such supreme beauty that nothing can be finer. I have seen Naples, been over the Amalfi drive and have seen something finer. It is the African shore of the Mediterranean road between Tenes and Cherchel. It is breath-taking. The road was encountered on the journey of the Studebaker Pathfinder around the Mediterranean Sea in the interest of American motorists for The Constitution and the Studebaker Motor Corporation.

The complete story of the motor drive from Tetouan, Spanish Morocco, to Constantine, French Algeria, one of the distinctive cities of the world, 1,125 miles, is one of continuing interest. Most of the cities and villages along the route are two cities—the old and the new—the old city is Moorish, picturesque beyond telling. The new is French, not quite so picturesque but clean. I have yet to see a rubbish heap in Africa.

The first important stop after leaving Tetouan is Larache on the shores of the Atlantic ocean, then El Ksar el Kebic, the customs station between Spanish and French Morocco. After the customs stop we were free from customs examination and will be free until we hit Libya, the Italian protectorate, about 400 miles further on.

Cities on the route read like a tale from a dream book—a few are: Souk el Arba du Gharb, Pettijean, Meknes the sacred city of the Moors, Fez the beautiful capital of French Morocco; Taza, Guercif, Taourirt the city that is the scene of many romantic stories of the French Foreign Legion, El Aioun-Sidi-Melouk, Ouidja, Tlemcen, Sidi-Bel-Abbes headquarters of the French Foreign Legion, the commemorative at Oued Isly where the French, winning a battle, settled the fate of Morocco, St. Denis du Sie, Arzew, Mostaganem, Tenes, Cherchel, Alger, Palestro, Bouira, Setif and Constantine.

England's Castles, Private Gardens Thrown Open to American Visitors

WARWICK, Warwickshire, Eng., May 25.—It is a genuine surprise to Americans who come to England to learn that the most beautiful private gardens in the country are open to the public. In most cases there is an admission fee of a shilling, and the money thus collected goes to help defray the expenses of the Queen's Institute District Nursing, devoted to charity in the city of London. Last year as much as $55,000 was collected in this manner.

Warwick castle is one of the beautiful estates open to the public in the general effort to help Queen Mary's favorite charity. Not only may one visit the gardens here, but the castle is also open to polite people of proper appearance. The castle has housed Richard III, Queen Elizabeth, James I., Queen Adelaide and Queen Victoria.

Chatsworth, in Derbyshire, is another of the numerous estates open to the visitor. For grandeur and dignity of layout, the gardens are unsurpassed in all England. It was on this estate that Mary, queen of Scots, was held captive by Bess of Hardwick, when she was the Countess of Shrewsbury.

Hatfield house, 18 miles north of London, not only has its exquisite gardens, but the buildings wear a great aura of history. It was once the home of King James I. Later Edward VI lived there.

Perhaps the most famous house in England is Knole, at Seven Oaks, Kent. Remarkable as are the fine gardens here, the paintings in the old halls will engross the attention of the visitor. There are 12 by Sir Joshua Reynolds, several by Daniel Mytens, and three by Holbein.

In Burghley Hall, Stamford, Lincolnshire, may be seen Queen Elizabeth's bedroom just as it was when she slept there more than three centuries ago.

NEW FRENCH LINER IS DUE TO ARRIVE IN GOTHAM IN JUNE

That the maiden voyage of the French Line's new mammoth ship Normandie, arriving in New York on June 3, is commanding the attention of travelers the world over, is evidenced by an announcement made that from two widely separated points in the Pacific there have been received at the New York offices of the French Line requests for reservations on the giant liner when she sails on June 7 for her home port at Havre after four days of public welcoming in New York.

The first request, according to the French Line announcement, was received from a passenger on board the S. S. President Coolidge en route from the Orient to America, and the second from Auckland, New Zealand.

CRUISE IS PLANNED TO SOUTH SEA ISLES

Ocean Jaunt Off Beaten Travel Paths Is Offered Americans.

NEW YORK, May 25.—A special summer cruise off the beaten travel paths with the picturesque mingling of the ultra-modern and primitive, uniting in their holiday moods for the Silver Jubilee, has this week been announced by the American Express Company. Leaving San Francisco July 3 on the R. M. S. "Makura" the Australasia adventure will begin with a visit to the little French owned island capital of Tahiti, proceeding to Rarotonga, colorful coral village of the Cook Isles, where the low native huts and pretty bungalows have become the Polynesian and Samoan screen settings for the South Seas.

"At Wellington, Sydney and Melbourne, the summer programs for the Jubilee extend from the modern metropolis to the remote hinterland, and will present a transplanted bit of Britain, rejoicing with native festivities in honoring a far-away island throne," says Douglas Malcolm, of the Travel Service, who cites the astonishing contrast which will be seen in dynamic young Australia.

Everywhere stepping stone tours of diversity are presented in close proximity throughout a continent almost as large as Europe. From Sydney's beautiful buildings, art galleries, theaters and incomparable gardens, a journey will be made to the Blue Mountain native villages, and the famous Jenolan Caves, with a similar tour to include the primitive bush lands, which form a background to the stately, spacious boulevard city of Melbourne, which resembles Washington, D. C., with its luxurious public buildings, museums, and natural history galleries.

Among the exciting features of the New Zealand tour will be the "Paradise Valley" drive to the friendly Franz Josef, and the scornful Fox Glaciers. The two great spectacles of nature are 17 miles apart.

NEW CANADA HIGHWAY TO DRAW U. S. TOURISTS

Montreal, Quebec Preparing for Influx of American Motorists.

MONTREAL, Que., May 25.—Montreal and the eastern townships, Quebec's "New England of Canada," this spring are celebrating completion of one of the most modern highways in North America, a new road which is already playing a major role in Quebec touring and recreational activities.

Indicating a record season for 1935, the new road is receiving a steadily increasing flow of traffic as visitors pour in from the United States to picturesque French Canadian cities and Quebec's hundreds of camping and fishing preserves.

The highway ribbons through the picturesque mountainous country between Granby and Magog, southeast of here. It marks the end of three years of engineering and construction effort and the forging of another link of modern, improved highway between Montreal and the United States border.

A part of Quebec Highway No. 1, which begins at Sherbrooke, capital of the eastern townships, and goes to Montreal, connecting with half a dozen roads to the United States border along the way, the scenic new Granby-Magog section is being hailed as an engineering masterpiece by experts. Mountains, swamps, lakes and generally irregular country were constant handicaps. At one place, Lake Orford, it was necessary to build a dyke 400 feet long and 23 feet deep to eliminate a sharp reverse curve.

FUGITIVE FROM GANG ESCAPES AFTER CRASH

Following a wild automobile chase through Decatur, Mike Thompson, bank bandit and escape from the Dougherty county chain gang, wrecked the car in which he was spotted yesterday morning and fled from pursuing Decatur police afoot. The smashed machine was identified as one which had been stolen last week in Albany.

Bloodhounds have been put on the trail of the bandit, who is under sentences totaling 75 years for robberies and other offenses. His latest conviction was for the holdup of the Luther Williams bank, of Macon. Several untried indictments are pending against him in DeKalb county.

Thompson has effected five escapes from county chain gangs in the last two years. He was driving through Decatur at 7 o'clock yesterday morning when Patrolmen Walter Carroll and Ralph Abercrombie recognized him and gave chase.

SEVERAL INJURED IN PARIS RIOTING

PARIS, May 25.—(UP)—An anti-government riot in which several were injured broke out at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier today.

A milling, cheering crowd of nationalists shouted, "Put Weygand in power," hemming in the famous French soldier, General Max Weygand and his wife.

Weygand had presided at a ceremoney of rekindling the eternal flame at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier, on behalf of a group of war veteran dragoons.

The crowd, shouting against the government, tried to hoist Weygand to their shoulders. He and his wife were unable to escape and were hemmed in for two hours. They finally had to seek refuge in a near-by house, which they left by a side door.

Court Upholds Verdict But Bans Attorney Fees

The court of appeals yesterday upheld a $6,500 damage suit verdict, providing that attorneys' fees of $1,300 awarded by a jury along with the verdict are set aside.

The case is that of Nathan Greenberg against the Shaefer Baking Company, of Savannah, Shaefer having been represented by Attorney John J. Bonhan. Greenberg sued for alleged breach of contract.

North Georgia Mountains Beckon As Week-End Mecca of Atlantans

(Pictures in Rotogravure Section.)
By TURNER HIERS.

The hills of Georgia's northlands are destined to become in fact the week-end Mecca of tired Atlantans and other Georgians who wish to avail themselves of the unsurpassed scenic beauty and the restfulness of the primeval forests.

Credit for this is due for the most part to President Roosevelt and the untiring and far-sighted efforts of the United States Forest Service. For they have, with the assistance of the several Civilian Conservation Corps camps assigned to the Cherokee and Nantahalla national forests, built roads and established recreation areas that should have been built years ago by the state or private enterprise.

Even though the work of the forest service has merely begun, it has through the construction of roads given Georgians a chance to see, explore, and enjoy the hidden beauty of a formerly inaccessible portion of their state.

Recreational Center.

However, this initiative on the part of the federal government is not aimed to monopolize, but to encourage private and state enterprise to catch the idea and do its part in providing for the recreation of its citizenry. And the state has already responded in that it has begun the splendid work of beautifying and the making of a recreational center of the Vogel state park, just off the Gainesville-to-Blairsville highway.

Among the many sights to be seen at this time of the year, before July, is the blooming of the native mountain laurel, rhododendron and azaleas. As a matter of fact, springtime has just turned the corner and is working full time at Woody's and Neel's gaps, in the Cherokee and Nantahalla forests, respectively.

And, to be seen too, is the daily living and work of the native habitants, said to be purest of the Anglo-Saxon race in existance today.

Also, there is in the Cherokee forest, the game refuge, mountain streams, waterfalls, Brass Town Bald, the highest mountain in Georgia (altitude 4,768), and Blood mountain (altitude 4,463), the second highest, where the Cherokee Indians are reported to have made their last stand against the invasion of the pale faces. This section saw some of the bitterest fights between the Indians and the whites. Forest Ranger Arthur Woody, is the "kingfish," "generalissimo," or "what not" in this territory as far as your Uncle Sam is concerned. He is a native of the territory, appreciates its beauty, and is glad to help anyone make his journey to the north Georgia mountains a pleasant one.

Gold Mining Active.

Around Dahlonega one may see gold mining any time, both primitive to the nth degree and via the modern method. Approximately 75 persons are able to make a living year in and year out by the old method of "panning" the yellow metal. Bill Jenkins, one of this group if miners, "pans" two to three thousand dollars' worth of the shiny metal each year.

Probably the best and most profitable mining with modern machinery is done at the Branch mine in the Auraria section of Lumpkin county, by the Southern Mineral Development Co., about six miles from Dahlonega and operated by R. A. Newton. Mr. Newton said that the old method of mininng with modern machinery will net a profit.

Near Clayton one enters the Nantahalla National forest, where Ranger Roscoe C. Nicholson is in charge. Here, as well as other points in north Georgia, there seems to have remained the beautiful Indian names left by the Cherokees. An example of how they appreciate it is that one of the recreational areas and picnicing grounds has been christened "War Woman Glade." The Georgia part of the Nantahalla forest includes forest lands around lakes Burton, Nacoochee, and Rabun, and other mountain streams where there is plenty good fishing and boating for the tourist to the section. Too, there's the beautiful and well-known Tallulah gorge.

Murder, Suicide.

MONTICELLO, Ark., May 25.—(AP)—Sheriff W. C. Cruce reported today that Zack Johnson, 52, farmer, this morning shot and killed Will Berry, 55, his brother-in-law, and then committed suicide at his home near here. The sheriff said he was told there had been a difficulty between the two of several years' standing.

The CONSTITUTION'S STAMP CORNER

By Albert C. Leitch

When Amelia Earhart Putnam passed over Atlanta at 10,000 feet recently on her non-stop hop from Mexico City to New York, she carried a few covers with stamps of a face value of 20 cents. After the 14-hour flight these covers became worth $250 to philatelists. Here is one she carried addressed to herself. (Central Press.)

Three-cent, ordinary, 1932 series, subject, 400—21,363, 21,364, 21,365, 21,366, 21,369 and 21,370.

Three-cent, Connecticut commemorative, 1935 series, subject, 200—21,391, 21,392, 21,393, 21,394, 21,395 and 21,396.

The Connecticut stamp was sent to press first on April 17, with plate numbers 21,394 and 21,395.

CONNECTICUT STAMPS IN DECIDED VARIETY

There has been noted a decided variety on the 3-cent Connecticut commemorative.

On sheet plate No. 21395 at top of right pane second stamp in opposite plate number the mark across the "c" in "cent" is missing. This has been seen both in mint and on covers. In some of the canceled stamps seen thus far there are decided varieties while in other copies the line is noted very faintly.

ISSUE RELEASED FOR PHILIPPINES

A new list of Philippine stamps has been issued by the Philippine trade commissioner in the Barr building. The change to be noted is that the 2 centavo value of the Far Eastern Olympic championship games commemorative has been removed. These stamps were issued in Manila on April 14, 1934, being printed at Manila. The 6 and 16 centavo values are still to be had.

The pictorial series is still intact. The complete set from 2 centavo through 5 peso can be had for $6.67. Short sets are also available.

The current series, flat press, perf. 11, 2, 4, 6, 8, 10, 12, 16, 20, 26 and 30 centavos, 20 centavo special delivery, 4 and 10 peso, 4 peso surcharged 1 peso and 4 peso surcharged 2 peso can be obtained. These stamps can also be secured "O. B."—official business.

Postage due can be obtained only in sets, 4, 6, 8, 10, 12, 16 and 20 centavos, as well as the air mail overprinted on the pictorials.

STAMPS CALLED BEST INVESTMENT

Stamp collectors of today may well heed the warnin of an old-time collector. In speaking of the collectors of years age and those of today, James F. Duhamel said:

"Don't neglect your opportunity as I did. When I first began to buy stamps I might have put up a whole dollar for a sheet of the 1-cent, buff, head of Franklin in 1869 when they were sold for a dollar a hundred. Lately this stamp in blocks of four has sold for $60 or $15 each, unused, or $1,500 for a $1 investment. But too late, I did not buy the whole sheet.

"This may be an example for the youthful philatelist. He has many opportunities to buy United States stamps that near the end of his life will increase in value a thousand fold. There is no better investment."

RUSSIA ISSUES NEW PICTORIALS

Soviet Russia has issued another set of pictorials, according to word received from the Soviet Philatelic Association of Moscow.

The stamps are issued to popularize the world-wide "Spartakiada," which will take place in Moscow. The set was issued by the soviet postoffice representing "physical jerks." The stamps are in two colors of ten values as follows:

The stamps are printed on white compact paper without any watermark; perforated 14. The size of the stamps, 40.5 mm. by 40.5 mm. The stamps were designed by the noted artist, W. W. Sawjalow.

The small values are to be issued in lots of 200,000, but the total quantity will not exceed 50,000 sets. The issue is unusually attractive.

GREAT WHITE FLEET

Only Super Genius Could Make Car Alone

Only a super-genius could build an automobile by himself and no such man ever lived.

Captain E. D. C. Herne, chief inspector of the De Soto factory in Detroit, made this interesting observation today to illustrate the multiple operations that go into the manufacture of a modern motor car.

"In the first place," he said, "the man who attempted to build a car alone would have to be a geologist, with an expert's knowledge of how and where to locate iron ore. He would have to be a miner and a metallurgist, so he could mine the ore and turn it into iron and steel."

Captain Herne said this super-man—if such a man lived—would have to be a farmer and planter. He would have to know how to grow cotton and cultivate rubber trees.

"This genius would have to be a chemist and a textile expert, so he could change the raw cotton into cloth of the proper color," he said. "He'd have to know how to extract rubber from the trees and make it into tires and other rubber parts used in the car.

"Even then he would fail unless he knew how to make glass from sand and could cut it to fit into the windshield, windows and doors of the car. Then, too, he'd have to know all about raising cattle and sheep and be able to make leather and change wool into woolen fabric."

Captain Herne said the genius would be just beginning his task when he finished collecting all of the materials.

"A modern car such as the De Soto has at least 2,000 different parts," he said, "and each part represents numerous operations before it is ready to be fitted into the car. Thousands of skilled men are employed performing these operations."

The De Soto offical said that the lone master-mind attempting to build a car by himself would have to duplicate the work of these thousands. He said the man would have to be a designer, engineer, artist and mechanic all rolled into one. He'd have to be able to make the tools and machines used in shaping the parts to fractions of one-thousandth of an inch. Then he'd have to know how to operate the machines and check their accuracy.

"No one man could possibly know how to do all of these operations," he said. "The finished automobile—more than anything else in this modern world of ours—represents the combined knowledge of thousands and the accumulated information of centuries."

Pontiac Production Has Passed Entire Output of 1934

PONTIAC, Mich., May 25.—Total production of 1935 model Pontiac sixes and eights now exceeds by a wide margin the entire production of 1934 models, it was stated today by H. J. Klingler, president and general manager of the Pontiac Motor Company.

"The 1934 model figure was passed earlier this week," said Mr. Klinger, "and the count at the close of business yesterday, the fifteenth, showed that we have built 80,925 of the new 1935 models. This compares with a total of 76,533 for the entire production of 1934 Pontiacs.

"There is no slackening in our May production. In fact we produced 10,367 cars in the first 11 working days, which is an average of 942 per day. During that period there were three days of 1,000 cars a day or better. One of them, 1,017, represents the biggest single day's production this year. We should wind up the month with a 19,000 car total. April output was 18,749.

"Retail deliveries are continuing at the same high rate. May figures, of course, will not be available until well into June, but during the first four months this year our dealers delivered more than twice as many new Pontiacs as they delivered during the same four-month period of any one of the previous three years.

"From our closest observation of conditions throughout the country, we have no reason to doubt that Pontiac dealers will sell 150,000 cars this year, which will be more than twice their sales of 1934."

Buying Power Is on Increase, Asserts Cowling

Hailing the most hopeful outlook for national recovery in many years, W. C. Cowling, general sales manager for the Ford Motor Company, addressed 200 southeastern Ford dealers at a luncheon at the Biltmore hotel, Atlanta.

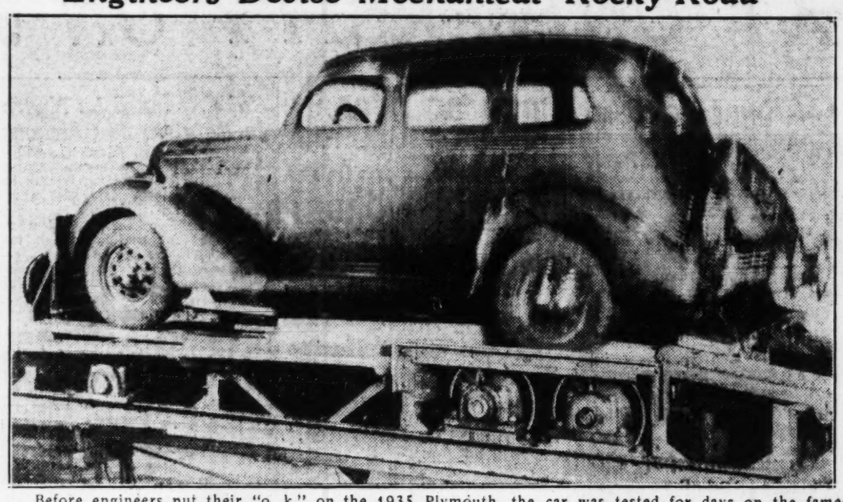

"Conditions in the southeast look far better than they did last year," Mr. Cowling said, "and I am convinced that this is a healthy, permanent improvement and not a 'flash in the pan.'"

Asked for specific evidence of the upturn, Mr. Cowling stated that the automobile industry's recovery has distinctly exceeded expectations and that automobile sales are a reliable advance index of general improvement.

"During the first quarter of 1935 more Ford cars were sold than for any similar period since 1930," Mr. Cowling stated. "Since March 1, the Ford Motor Company has been producing at its full capacity of 6,000 units a day. Our southeastern territory was given a very substantial quota of the total Ford production for 1935. Mr. Cowling said, and our deliveries in the southeast have considerably exceeded the quota set for the first four months of 1935. Our truck and commercial car sales are also ahead of the quota set which is very indicative of the increased business and industrial activity in this section.

"Henry Ford's faith in our country's future is evidenced by the wage increase to a minimum of $8 a day, put into effect within the last few days," Mr. Cowling added.

Engineers Devise Mechanical 'Rocky Road'

Before engineers put their "o. k." on the 1935 Plymouth, the car was tested for days on the famed "Belgian roll" shown above. This proving device consists of four rollers studded with irregular cleats three inches high. Driven by the power of the car, the strange machine delivers punishment to the car that is similar to driving over rutted roads at high speed. Laboratory engineers claim that 24 hours of this racking test is equal to thousands of miles of the roughest kind of driving.

Learns of Public Enemy "Number One"

Huge Newspaper Campaign Announces New Premium Oil

"More motor oil for less money" might be the title of the large advertising campaign which is now appearing in almost 1,000 newspapers. In publicizing its new Gulflube motor oil, a premium grade oil sold at 25 cents a quart, the Gulf Refining Company reports the facts to over 12,000,000 readers. The latter learn that the lubricant, refined by Gulf's revolutionary Multi-Sol process, has practically all impurities "washed" away at no extra cost to the motorist.

In addition to the thousands of columns of newspaper space occupied by the Gulf Refining Company, extra miles of copy will appear at the behest of the 40,000 Gulf dealers located from Maine to Texas. These will go more into detail in advising car owners how to increase their mileage through the use of the new Gulflube and how this will give them quicker and easier starting in all kinds of weather.

Further prominence in Gulflube will be given in the Gulf Funny Weekly, of which two and a half million copies are distributed free every Friday by the Orange disc service stations and dealers. After motorists and their children enjoy Curly and the other famous cartoon figures, they will be treated to a full page of facts and testimonials about the amazing new premium 25-cents-a-quart motor oil.

Another medium for the dissemination of information includes many hundreds of colorful highway posters, located on all the main highways. Also, several radio headliner programs will interrupt such luminaries as Will Rogers, the Revellers and James Melton only long enough for brief announcements covering Gulflube economy and performance.

Cone Street Garage Is Appointed Dealer For Goodrich Tires

Announcement has been made by the Goodrich Silvertown, Inc., of the appointment of the Cone Street Garage as downtown dealers for the Goodrich line of tires, tubes and batteries.

The Cone Street Garage, one of Atlanta's finest downtown parking buildings, located at the corner of Cone and Fairlie streets, with the acquisition of the tire and battery lines are now able to offer their clients one-stop service, including everything necessary for quick, efficient adjustments and cleaning.

The Cone Street Garage is under the direction of W. M. Mulkey, veteran Atlanta tire man, who recently was appointed to direct the various operations and departments they have. Since his appointment several weeks ago he has improved the service to a point to where it is second to none in Atlanta.

The garage itself is one of the largest in the city. They serve motorists of the west side of Atlanta's business district and do a large volume of day and night storage business.

Plymouth Uses New Device To Test Bodies

"Harder to get than an engineer's okay" is a phrase that is well known in automotive circles. And rightly so, too, for the automobile engineers who have the responsibility of designing a new model won't put their stamp of approval on anything until it has been proved and tested.

The great Chrysler engineering laboratories at Highland Park are a weird maze of testing devices. Strange and ingenious pieces of equipment have been built to test the stamina of engines, of springs, even of the mechanism that winds up the windows. These are running 24 hours a day to make sure that every part of the car is up to standard.

One of the most interesting of these safeguards of quality is a machine that was used in testing the 1935 Plymouth. Dubbed by the engineers as the "Belgian Roll," it consists of four large diameter rollers on which the four wheels of the car are placed. Each roller is studded with irregular-shaped cleats about three inches high. Using its own power, the car drove the rollers.

An automatic throttle control accelerated and retarded the speed of the car as it rode the cleated rolls, receiving hundreds of terrific impacts a minute. Twenty-four hours a day . . . day after day . . . the test car stood this havoc-wreaking punishment equivalent to thousands and thousands of miles of travel.

Parts that were broken during this racking test were redesigned and retested until they received the critical engineering approval. Even rattles and squeaks that showed up in the test were remedied by improved construction. Only when tests showed that the car could "take it" under these gruelling conditions, did the engineers stamp it "O. K."

Machado's Niece Hurt.

CAMDEN, N. J., May 25.—(AP)—A niece of former President Machado, of Cuba, was among six persons injured in an automobile accident early today in Pennsauken township. She is Rita Machado, daughter of Dr. G. J. Machado, of Collingswood. She is a junior at the Collingswood High school. The car in which she was riding with friends overturned in a collision.

Big Used Car Day Reported By Beaudry

Used car sales continue to reach new high marks. Saturday, according to a statement just released by Ernest G. Beaudry, prominent Atlanta Ford dealer, was the largest day in the history of the company. After the final check-up it was found that their used car salesmen had sold 18 units, for a gross amount of $5,759, of which $4,235 was net.

This is a very unusual record for a single day. It is an indication of the acceptance by the public of the cars after Mr. Beaudry puts them up for display and the policies maintained for that department.

The company's used car department is one of the largest in the Atlanta Ford branch territory. A service department of 25 men and kept on hand at all times to put them in the proper condition for selling, and the annual turn over of car stocks is tremendous.

The used car department of the company is under the direction of J. N. Aldridge, one of Atlanta's pioneer automobile sales executives. He is responsible for many ideas and policies that are now being used by Ford dealers in the merchandising of used cars, all over America.

A large variety of cars, covering every price range is in stock at all times and for this reason used car buyers go in a steady stream especially when special bargains are announced.

The company is perhaps one of the most consistent newspaper advertisers in the south today. Their ads are a daily feature of the classified pages of The Constitution and many readers have profited through this medium of contact.

Department Head

Bailey Allen, general manager for the local Firestone Service Stores, Inc., has announced the appointment of E. E. "Mike" Lynch as manager of the Firestone Budget department.

Mr. Lynch, while a young man, is well known throughout local tire circles, having worked his way up to sales representative after serving several years on the service floor. He has a wide and varied experience and is well qualified to hold this new and important assignment.

High, Wide and Handsome

Modern Rhythm in Dance and Car

Beauty and rhythm can be designed into a motor car as well as created in a dance. Velez and Yolanda, stars of entertainment where "society" gathers from coast to coast and now filling an engagement at Chicago's exclusive Empire room in the Palmer House, booked as the "World's Greatest Dance Team," are shown with a Pontiac eight sedan, the motor car designer's modern rhythm in steel.

Confesses Slaying.

JACKSON, Miss., May 25.—(AP)—District Attorney Fred M. Belk, of Holly Springs, said today that Caesar Higginbotham, negro, had confessed the killing Tuesday of Glenn D. Roberts, Oxford planter, because he was "mad at him."

Chrysler Shipments Continue To Reach New High Marks

One of the most remarkable business increases in the history of the automotive industry was recorded by the Chrysler Sales Corporation from January 1 to May 1 this year. In these four months, factory shipments totaled 22,050 Chryslers. In the same period of 1934, Chrysler shipped 14,600 cars. This makes a gain of 51.1 per cent for 1935 over the corresponding period of 1934.

Retail deliveries are keeping pace with factory shipment, as is proved by the fact that three times during the month of April Chrysler dealers set new "all-time" high records for the combined sales of Chrysler and Plymouth cars during a single week. In the week ending April 27, 5200 units were delivered at retail in the United States. This is exclusive of the very large retail deliveries of Plymouths by Dodge and DeSoto dealers.

An old automobile, recently dragged from the bottom of the Hudson river channel near New York City where it had been submerged more than 10 years, was found equipped with four pneumatic tires still containing air, the finder has advised The B. F. Goodrich Company, Akron, Ohio.

Although rims and wire wheels were almost entirely rusted away, the tires were remarkably preserved and seemed to have sufficient pressure for actual road service, observers said.

CROPS REPORTED AS BEST IN YEARS IN SOUTH GEORGIA

By GRADY ADAMS.

MOULTRIE, Ga., May 25.—W. J. Matthews, veteran Moultrie fertilizer dealer and well-informed farm observer, declares "South Georgia crops are more promising" than he has ever seen them at this date in May. This is true, he added, of all of the chief crops, cotton, tobacco, corn, peanuts and watermelons. They are also much further advanced than they usually are at this time of year, Matthews declares.

The first cotton blooms of the season were shown in Moultrie Thursday. They were brought in from the farm of J. T. Griffin, who lives near Berlin. Watermelons will begin moving around June 5, or fully 10 days sooner than the first shipments went forward last year.

The truck and plant shipping season is drawing to a close and watermelons will be the next crop marketed. The truck and plant people fared much better this season than they have in a long time. It has developed into a tremendous industry.

Omega, 18 miles north of Moultrie, is one of the major plant shipping points. Sixty solid carloads of tomato plants alone have rolled from there this season. Tens of thousands of plants were handled from the same place by trucks and it is estimated that $100,000 was distributed among the growers.

For a number of years Omega has been an important shipping center for Fordhook beans and a large acreage in that territory was given to the crop this year. These beans will begin moving next week. It is believed the price will open at a profitable point.

BRIDGE OPENING FETE IS PLANNED AT CANTON

Completion of Georgia-to-Tennessee Highway Observed July 4.

CANTON, Ga., May 25.—(AP)—Plans for a monster civic celebration here July 4, on completion of the new Etowah bridge, and paving of the Marietta-Canton-Copperhill, Tenn., highway were announced today by Mayor Grady Coker, of Canton.

Governor Eugene Talmadge, members of the state highway board and other highway officials, will be among the prominent visitors on the occasion, to "which all citizens of Georgia are herewith invited," the mayor said.

"The celebration is going to be one of the greatest things of its kind in years," said the mayor. "We're expecting thousands of people here from various sections of the state."

He said details of the program were being worked out now, but that Governor Talmadge had accepted, many months ago, an invitation to speak here. Work is now under way on the completion of the paving from Canton to the Tennessee line, on the road to Ellijay.

A baseball game has been arranged for the morning between Buford and Canton, and another game is being planned for the afternoon.

It will be a basket picnic affair, to which all citizens of Georgia have been invited, the mayor said.

Wine Act May Solve Fruit Problem, Georgia Editor Tells Floridans

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., May 25.—(AP)—Compatibility between the interests and welfare of Georgia and Florida was stressed here today by Georgians who came here as guests of the Georgia Hotel Association for a two-day visit, an interlude of the annual convention at Savannah.

"Florida is just coming into her own," said Clark Howell Sr., editor of The Atlanta Constitution. Furthermore, he said, the state will experience a period of stable prosperity that will have none of the boom-day structure.

W. T. Anderson, editor of the Macon Telegraph, expressed the conviction that both Georgia and Florida will be able to solve the problem of fruit surpluses by manufacture of wines. Wines produced from either the peach crop of Georgia or the citrus of Florida, he said, should promote temperance and decrease the consumption of hard liquors.

An average peach crop of 10,000 cars, during some years hard to market, Anderson said, should be one of 50,000 cars, easily salable and in demand.

Florida and Georgia have much in common, declared E. D. Rivers, speaker of the Georgia house, saying that just so far as Florida profits in the tourist business does Georgia also, for the neighboring state is the passageway for Florida's winter visitors.

Rivers stressed the importance strategically of the Georgia and Florida sea beaches and how they may be developed for mutual benefit. Both states should develop these playgrounds in a spirit of harmony, he said, with the idea that what will benefit one will also accrue to the other.

Herschel V. Jenkins, president of the Savannah Morning News and Evening Press, also saw a remarkable development in store of this section of the southeast. He brought the greetings of Savannah to her neighboring seaport city. Mayor John T. Alsop Jr., of Jacksonville, welcomed the Georgians.

The hotel men and their guests arrived early aboard the Dorchester of the Merchants' and Miners' line, after an overnight voyage from Savannah.

During the trip here, the "Soup and Nuts Club" was organized under the direction of Charles G. Day, of the Hotel DeSoto at Savannah.

After breakfast on the Dorchester, the party enjoyed a full day of entertainment with the fourth annual golf tournament at Pone Vedra Country Club at Jacksonville Beach during the afternoon. A banquet and dancing closed the day's activities tonight. Milton E. Bacon, Jacksonville insurance man, was toastmaster and L. O. Moseley, manager of the Winecoff, Atlanta, and Jerry R. Caldwell, manager of the Windsor, Jacksonville, were hosts.

The party will return to Savannah aboard the ship tomorrow night and end the convention with business sessions Monday.

MOTORCADE TO OPEN FLORIDA SHORT LINE

COLUMBUS, Ga., May 25.—(AP)—A motorcade to celebrate completion of paving on the Florida short route between Columbus and Albany, is expected to be held in four or five weeks.

Nelson Shipp, editor of the Columbus Ledger, visited Albany this week to arouse interest in the motorcade, which is to be sponsored by the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer Sun and the Albany Herald.

Shipp said a completely paved route between the two cities will result in more visitors from each going to the other. Besides the cities themselves, Shipp said, Fort Benning, near Columbus, and Radium Springs, near Albany, will attract visitors.

PINE LAKE LOT SALES PASS EXPECTATIONS

More than pleased with response to the announcement 10 days ago of the opening of Pine Lake, new summer resort development, Carl M. Schaub, president of the Pine Woods Company, owners of the property, stated Friday that sales of lots for the first week have been far greater than he anticipated.

Many purchasers of lots, Mr. Schaub stated, have already definitely completed plans to build summer cottages at Pine Lake, the first cottage having been well started this week.

Conveniently situated, only 12 miles from Atlanta, beyond Avondale Estates in DeKalb county, Pine Lake shows promise of becoming a highly popular summer resort, especially for people who cannot be away from the city more than a few days at a time.

The Pine Lake property consists of a total of 160 acres surrounding a picturesque lake 600 by 1,500 feet. On a knoll overlooking the lake and with a splendid view of Stone mountain, a spacious clubhouse has been built and furnished.

The clubhouse will be for the exclusive use of Pine Lake property owners and with the lake and the parks surrounding it, will be turned over to an association of property owners.

Pine Lake park is improved with docks, bathhouse and children's playground. The lake is being stocked with a plentiful supply of game fish and within a year or two should be one of the best fishing spots in this section.

All lots at Pine Lake are being offered at the same price, regardless of location, with a small down payment and small monthly payments, thus enabling families of moderate means to acquire one of the lots for spending the summer with ideal resort facilities.

The Pine Woods Company maintains a field office at the resort and also maintains an office in Room 303 William-Oliver building.

REAL ESTATE AUCTION PROVES SUCCESSFUL

One of the most successful real estate auction sales in recent months was conducted last Tuesday and Wednesday by the Lummus Auction Company for the Chattahochee Brick Company, of Atlanta.

The property known as the English estate consists of 1,000 acres located on the Bankhead highway just beyond the river. It was subdivided into tracts ranging from 3 to 40 acres and brought an average of more than $35 per acre.

Many of the purchasers have indicated they will make immediate improvements, including the erection of homes on the tracts facing Riverside drive. One of the features of the sale was the awarding of a cash prize of $50 to the person submitting the most appropriate name for the new development. From hundreds of names suggested the committee chose the name "Riverton," submitted by Mrs. J. W. McGuire, 803 Essie avenue, S. W., who was present to receive the award.

More than 1,000 persons attended the sale and enjoyed an old-fashioned barbecue, cooked and served on the grounds. The Ford V-8 offered by the Lummus Company was won by Mrs. Mary DeBardeleben, Oakdale Station, Marietta car line.

DENTAL COLLEGE CONFERS DEGREES WEDNESDAY NIGHT

The Atlanta-Southern Dental College will hold its 47th annual graduation exercises Wednesday night at 8:30 o'clock in the auditorium of the Atlanta Woman's Club, at which time 70 seniors will be candidates for the degree of doctor of dental surgery.

The exercises will begin with an invocation by Dr. J. Russell Mitchell. Dr. James Wilson Johnson, pastor of St. Mark's M. E. Church, South, will be the principal speaker. A feature of the program will be presentation of keys of the honorary dental fraternity, Omicron Kappa Upsilon, by Dr. Sheppard W. Foster, president of the college. The emblem of the fraternity, the gold key, will be given to the 12 per cent of the graduating class who rank highest in scholastic standing.

Dr. Ralph R. Byrnes, dean, will read his annual report, in which he will outline the progress of the school during the past scholastic year. Dr. Byrnes will also act as master of ceremonies.

Judge Hugh M. Dorsey, chairman of the board of trustees, will confer the degrees, assisted by Dr. Claude N. Hughes, secretary of the school. Music will be in charge of Enrico Leide and his orchestra.

91 G. M. A. CADETS TO GET DIPLOMAS NEXT WEDNESDAY

Commencement week exercises at Georgia Military Academy in College Park will culminate Wednesday in graduation exercises, when diplomas will be awarded 91 cadets, the largest graduating class in the history of the academy.

Annual competitive company and individual drills took place yesterday, with United States army officers as judges. Last night, the annual minstrel show was held in the academy auditorium, under the direction of Captain John Lee.

The commencement sermon will be preached at 11 o'clock this morning in the academy auditorium by the Rev. Peter Marshall, pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian church. The regular parade will be staged this afternoon and a military exhibition given for the entertainment of the parents and visiting friends of the cadets.

Awarding of letters, monograms and trophies to academy athletes will take place at exercises to be held at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, with Coach Frank Anderson, of Oglethorpe University, as the principal speaker. The annual oratorical contest, participated in by representatives of every class, will be held at 8 o'clock tomorrow night.

Senior class day exercises are to be held in the school auditorium at 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, while the senior class will hold its annual banquet at the Athletic Club Tuesday night. William K. Meadow, alumni association president, will be the toastmaster.

Graduation exercises will be held at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning. Dave M. Parker, assistant attorney-general, will give the commencement address, and Colonel J. C. Woodward, president of the academy, will present diplomas to the seniors.

DOUBLE SLAYING TRIAL ON DOCKET FOR JUNE 11

The case of Alvin A. Downs, charged with the slaying of his father, C. C. Downs, and the latter's bookkeeper, Mrs. Myrtle Carter, was set yesterday by the solicitor-general for trial June 11 before Judge G. H. Howard. The elder Downs and his employe were fatally shot in the Alabama street gunsmith's shop operated by the father. Downs admitted the slaying of his father, claiming justification, but told officers he had no recollection of firing upon Mrs. Carter.

Superior court will operate for only three days this week, because of the convention of the State Bar Association at Sea Island. Judge Howard will preside tomorrow at the trial of James A. Browning and Hugh Lynch, charged with assault to rob Mrs. Fred Walker, concessionaire, at Base Hospital 48.

Six cases against A. T. Jean, alias Pee Wee Burns, are on the calendar for tomorrow before Judge Hugh M. Dorsey. Burns is charged with assault to murder Will Davis, assault and battery on J. E. Epps, a similar charge in which Joe Bodenhammer is the alleged victim, and also faces charges of using abusive language, operating a lottery and carrying a concealed weapon. Burns' cases have been continued from time to time awaiting his recovery from gunshot wounds which he told officers were inflicted accidentally by his wife. The assault cases grew out of an alleged altercation over payment to a customer who had "hit the bug" in Burns lottery.

CUBA GOES FORWARD

Improved trade conditions with Cuba have followed improved trade agreements and the stability of the present government on the island republic.

Cuba obtained her freedom because of the assistance of the United States, Spain's harsh grasp being released in 1898.

Today Cuba is going forward in government because of the aid of the United States and the Roosevelt administration. This administration abrogated the Platt amendment and created new trade treaties.

The abrogation of the Platt amendment was necessary in so far as was concerned Cuba's future. The young republic never had had a real chance to govern. The early history of Cuba was one of exploitation, ruthless looting and corruption by the Spanish governors.

And then, in 1902, Cuba was presented with a republic. The Platt amendment, which gave the United States control of Cuba's financial policy and which prevented revolution on threat of intervention, was a part of the constitution.

Cuba, with no experience at all in government, began efforts to govern. One mistake had been made by the original American committee. It had granted the franchise to all groups and all peoples with no restrictions whatsoever. This gave the franchise to literally thousands of aliens who had been imported on labor contracts, to sworn foes of the government, some being actually in arms against it, and this added to the burden of self-government which the entirely inexperienced people were attempting.

It was inevitable that corrupt government, schooled in the Spanish school, should result. The Platt amendment had the effect of sustaining those corrupt influences and governments.

Cuba today is freed of all restrictions, and the provisional government, the fourth since the overthrow of the vicious and corrupt Machado regime, shows every evidence of stability. Headed by Carlos Mendieta, whom even his opponents respect and admire, the government is sustained by a new army and a national police force. At the head of this is Fulgencio Batista, who rose from sergeant to head of the army.

It is he who held the destiny of Cuba in his hands. The nation expected him to make mistakes, but he has made none. He has taken a wise course, disclaiming any ideas of becoming president and insisting that he is a soldier and not a politician. He wishes to see only honest government and will support it.

As a result of the new stability, abrogation of the Platt amendment and the new trade treaties, Cuba has become, in one short year, our twelfth market, instead of the sixteenth. It is buying twice the amount of American goods that it bought a year ago. Georgia products, such as crating material, cotton yarn and other goods, are moving to the island in greater amounts.

The destinies of Cuba and the United States are inevitably bound together and it is fitting that this new chance for Cuba, the first real chance to promote her own government, should come from the nation which originally struck from her the shackles of Spain.

The people of Cuba, except for a radical minority of but a few people, less than a thousand in all the island, are friendly to America and to the American people. They always will be. This mutual friendship and regard will be of mutual benefit to both.

The free Filipinos will be wise to get the founders' views in writing and notarized at this time. Nothing balls up a 1935 issue like two conflicting opinions from George Washington.

THE WORK-RELIEF PAY SCALE.

Those who are seeking a revision of the wage schedule formulated for the $4,800,000,000 work-relief program ignore the confusion that would result if the pay for relief work is put on a parity with the wages received by workmen holding regular positions.

A serious criticism of the activities of both the CWA and PWA has been that in some instances the pay has been such as to cause unwise workers to leave jobs they have held for long periods in order that they might secure higher pay even if for only a short time.

The net result of these unreasonably high payments on public projects has been that thousands of laborers were eventually forced to go on the relief rolls and widespread unrest was created in business and industry.

The purpose of the work-relief program is to do away with the dole, and supply work at a livable wage to those who have for the most part been unemployed for a long period and dependent upon public funds for food, clothing and shelter. It is not the purpose to supply jobs that will give these unfortunate families as large incomes as if their wage-earners were regularly employed, for to do so would be to bankrupt the government.

A large per cent of the people of America are living, and living comfortably, on incomes no larger than the wages that will be paid on the relief-work projects. Few luxuries can be afforded on the scale of wages announced, but the pay received by the majority of the workers will make it possible for them to revolutionize the living conditions under which they have had to exist during long periods.

As conditions improve these workers will gradually be absorbed by industry and business and then they can rightfully expect the increased revenues that cannot reasonably be expected while they are being paid out of public funds.

NEW BREWERY FOR GEORGIA

The first concrete benefit from the legalization of the manufacture and sale of beer in Georgia is recorded in the announcement that a new brewery, with a capitalization of $650,000, will begin operation in Savannah in the near future.

The establishment of this brewery will give employment to a large number of workers, both men and women.

Other breweries in Georgia are already planning to step up their output and the renewed activity in the industry will aid both labor and agriculture and offer a new source for profitable investment.

Likewise the legalization of the manufacture and sale of wine made from Georgia grapes opens the way for vineyardists in this state to share with those of California the large market for domestic wines. Georgia is admirably equipped both as to climate and soil for the production of grapes from which wines of the highest grade can be made.

For years the state experiment station near Griffin has devoted earnest effort to the development and improvement of Georgia grapes. New types have been produced having not only improved flavor, but bearing more grapes per vine and having a longer bearing season.

Every agricultural agency of the state government, and the various organizations devoted to the promotion of agriculture in Georgia should exert every effort to speed the creation of large vineyards in the state.

At the same time, attention should be given to the production of the large supply of agricultural products that will be consumed annually by the breweries of the state.

PLAN MORE FARM MARKETS

While in attendance at the annual meeting of Kiwanis International in San Antonio last week, Georgia members of the organization outlined preliminary plans for increased activity in the interest of finding more markets for farm products in the state.

If the movement is consistently followed up, it will ultimately result in rendering far-reaching aid toward the rehabilitation of agriculture in Georgia.

With the curtailment of cotton production, farmers must produce livestock, food and feedstuffs, and when farm commodities are produced they must have a market.

When it is considered that Georgia imports more than $100,000,000 worth of food and feedstuffs every year, it is plain that there should be a market in the state for home-produced commodities.

The trouble is that for years we have grown cotton to the exclusion of food and feed, and created a huge market for imported commodities. It will be a difficult task to change this condition, but it can be done, and if the Kiwanis clubs in Georgia will assume leadership in the movement to establish farm markets, it will not be long until the farmers of Georgia will be supplying citizens of the state with all food and feedstuffs required.

This will keep that $100,000,000 in the state, where it will pass from consumers to farmers and from them back into the marts of trade, enhancing the prosperity of all communities and the entire state.

From time to time The Constitution has urged Kiwanis, Rotary, Civitan and Lions clubs to back a movement to start farm markets in their respective cities. Members of these organizations are the live business and professional men of their communities, and they should realize that there is no other movement that will more quickly spur business than for the farmers contiguous to these markets to have a ready cash sale for all food products of their farms.

The Georgia Vegetable Growers' Association, which has been recently formed, and which is now organizing county locals all over the state, will aid in helping farmers to produce high-grade vegetables, fruits and berries, and with nearby markets where these commodities may be sold for cash, it should not be long until the importation of food and feedstuffs will end.

THE SILVER EMBARGO

The embargo upon the entry of foreign silver into the United States, a step taken as explained in a statement by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau "in the spirit of co-operation," is directed at relieving critical conditions that have arisen in China and Mexico as the result of the higher price placed on silver by the American government.

The average American knows little of the mischief that has been done, especially in China, where the continuously rising price of the Chinese dollar has upset the money standard of the country and brought an acute business depression to the greater part of the nearly half billion Chinese.

As our price of silver has been boosted and the value of the Chinese dollar has increased, prices of commodities of every kind have dropped and business has steadily dwindled. During the past several months business failures have reached a total never before known, hundreds of banks have suspended and money has gone into hiding.

Speculators in silver and silver coins have grown rich, and the British-owned Hongkong and Shanghai bank has made a profit of $60,000,000 on the silver which jams its vaults.

With the first rise in the price of silver, Chinese coins began to flow out of the country because their silver content was worth more if exported to America than the coin was as a medium of currency at home. To stop the loss of currency the Nanking government put a heavy duty on the export of silver and cut off a few heads to stop the smuggling of the metal out of the country.

The decline in money in circulation—and silver money is about the only currency of stable value in China because of the huge amount of spurious paper in circulation—continued and the Chinese government was forced to turn to their legendary enemy, Japan, for a loan to stave off impending collapse.

It is not surprising that under such a condition China has bitterly criticized the United States on the ground that we were willing to wreck the economy of the country "for the sake of a piffling domestic political sop to a handful of our own citizens"—this protest being based on the belief that the silver policy of Washington was adopted merely to hasten recovery in the western silver mining area.

Mexico has been able to avoid serious results from our silver policy through the expedient of calling in all silver coin and issuing paper money against it. Since China has no stable paper currency, she was unable to take this step.

As the result of the importunities of both China and Mexico, and undoubtedly as the result of apprehension of complications that may result should the Nanking government get too heavily in debt to Japan, the American government declared the silver embargo. It will have little effect in this country but will enable the nations on the silver standard to stabilize their disordered currency and economic conditions.

WORK-RELIEF DISTRICTS

The decision to create 307 districts for the direction of the work-relief program should bring increased speed and efficiency in the expenditure of the $4,800,000,000 fund.

Excellent results have been secured from the same decentralization step with other recovery agencies, notably in the case of the HOLC, the regional offices of which have taken much of the load off the Washington headquarters and added to the smooth functioning of the organization.

It is impossible for any organization, however large its personnel, to handle rapidly the huge amount of detail work necessitated in the conduct of activities going on in all of the more than 3,000 counties in the United States. The original attempt to do this with the relief agencies was largely responsible for the delays that to a large extent nullified the effort to bring immediate relief.

Each of the 307 work-relief districts will be authorized to care for most of the detail work in their area, leaving to Washington only supervision and the formulation of general policies. With the work thus localized it should be possible to avoid much of the inevitable delay incident to an effort to centralize all authority in Washington.

NAZIS RAID CZECHOSLOVAKIA

The people of Czechoslovakia, the last remaining oasis of democracy in central Europe, have little to comfort them in the results of the recent parliamentary elections.

Just as in Austria, and other central European countries, the nazis under direction from Berlin, are undertaking to make a little Germany in a foreign land. The nazi, or Sudeten-German party as it is termed in Czechoslovakia, won more than 70 per cent of the votes in the districts in which expatriated Germans live in large numbers, making heavy inroads into the social democrats, agrarians and Catholics.

In previous elections the latter parties have divided most of the German votes, but about a year ago Hitler emissaries put in an appearance and now there has come into existence a party strongly pro-German and anti-democratic and which is a serious threat to Czechoslovakian unity.

The Prague government and the native population of the country is aroused over the new threat to the peace of the country and already a movement is on foot that will probably bring a coalition of the Czech parties in which the German population will have no part and which will therefore eliminate it from a voice in the government.

The Pan-Germanists, whose aim is to regain all the territory lost by the Germanic countries as a result of the provisions of the Treaty of Versailles, first tried their hand in Austria, but overstepped themselves in the assassination of Dollfuss and have been, at least temporarily, driven from the country. Next they tried their hands in the western provinces of Poland, with no greater success. Then they moved to Lithuania, where they were arrested in large numbers, the resultant trials being responsible for the several protests issued by Hitler.

The next step was Czechoslovakia, where they apparently caught the government napping, largely because the movement was more cleverly disguised than in the other countries in which it has been launched. As a result, the nazis will have 44 seats in the parliament, second only to the 45 seats of the agrarian party.

Undoubtedly the situation in Czechoslovakia is ominous, and reflects the threat to European peace from the openly voiced determination of the Pan-Germanists to bring about the formation of a great Germanic nation, or a coalition of nations in which German blood predominates. If successful the present governments of Austria, Hungary, Poland and Czechoslovakia would fall and the loss of territory would reduce all of these countries to the position of third-rate nations.

Would Pay Vets' Bonus Out of Work-Relief Fund

Editor Constitution: We regret that congress voted to spend four billion eight hundred million dollars. We believe that most of this money will be wasted. Since congress has voted to turn this large amount to the president, we think it would be a wise thing to pay the farmers their rental and also the soldiers out of this fund. We are going to have to pay the soldiers in 1945, and by paying them now out of this fund, we would have this debt out of the way.

There is no use to inflate the currency, but we think it should be paid out of the four billion eight hundred million dollar fund.

Centuries Have Left Bethany Untouched

Life Goes On as It Did in the Days of the Saviour in the Town to Which He Came to Weep for His Friend.

By PIERRE VAN PAASSEN,
European Correspondent of The Constitution.

The centuries have left Bethany untouched. The dusty road from Jerusalem suddenly narrows down to a dark passage between a group of low grey houses and passes on, out of the shadows into the sun. Time does not count in Bethany. The wind rustles softly through the olive-groves at dawn . . . a donkey brays out his complaint of the midday-heat . . . a stone crumples from a ruined wall in the evening and rolls into the dust. Such incidents mark the passing of the hours. Their rhythm is that of the drop of water which you hear falling in an adjacent room in the stillness of the night.

There is nothing in Bethany but silence. A limpid silence, illimited and profound as that of a peaceful ocean which has swallowed up a continent. Nothing has happened in this hamlet since the day when Jesus came to weep at the grave of his friend. A church marks the spot, a church with a dome, topped by a golden cross.

A black man chased me out whispering that it was closing time. He pointed to a muezzin on the minaret of a nearby mosque who was making ready to intone evening prayer. I saw swallows describing great sweeping arches, nervous at the chant, which they knew to be forthcoming, as the pigeons on St. Mark's square in Venice grow agitated a few moments before the thunder of a gun announces the hour of noon.

A boy with the features of a child by Rembrandt showed me the house. Some pilgrims wearing sun-helmets and Roman collars were singing a hymn in the doorway. An Arab in a white burnous, sitting against the wall watched them without surprise as he gnawed at the rind of a melon, and spat out the seeds.

A string of camels padded by, the drivers swaying to and fro on the backs of the ship-like beasts. From a nearby fold came the feeble bleat of young lambs.

The inhabitants of Bethany are humble people. Surrounding the village on all sides are bare, barren rocks. Green fields are rare. It is safe to assume that the generations who lived here in the past never knew anything like affluence. Two thousand years ago they certainly belonged to that lowly, untutored class, the rabble, whom the learned and the cultured aristocrats of the nearby capital held in contempt.

Yet Bethany was a favorite retreat of the Galilean. Everything here must have reminded him of that home in the North where the people were also poor, the houses, also, little better than hovels, the streets unpaved and famines frequent, but there too minds were open to new ideas and doors open to passing wayfarers. For the poor in this world are the most hospitable and the humblest have often the clearest conception of life and the meaning of the world.

They show you the room in Ermenonville where Rousseau wrote the "Social Contract;" in Paris the Club des Cordeliers where Danton roused his fellows to the attack upon feudal autocracy; in the Smolny Institute the bare chamber where the first decrees of a new world were drafted by Lenin. Birthplaces of revolution such places are called.

How about Bethany? When Jesus, compressing the sentiments of the Jewish religious school of his day, elevated every man to royal rank and then, in order to impart an even higher degree of sanctity to human dignity, proclaimed every man the son of the Master of the Universe, was that not a revolution?

Before his day the ancient world believed in what was known as the decretum horribile, the decree of honor. The world was a wheel of fortune which went around with inexorable fatality, bringing humiliation, poverty and suffering to millions in each generation in order that but a handfull might taste power and wealth and happiness. This was the divinely instituted ordinance from which there was no escape.

A great revolution occurred when the men who came to Bethany broke the spell of antique resignation by preaching a message of hope in another, a better world. The old order was to pass. A new ideal took its place. From Bethany runs an unbroken line to all the forward-looking movements of modern times.

Women were hastening through the street to fill their earthen jugs at the well, for it was eventide. They carried the vessels on their heads, as women have done in the East since time immemorial. Men were coming in from the fields; silent men, knotted and gnarled with toil on a harsh soil.

I lingered to watch what sort of meal the families ate in the evening, for even the daily fare cannot have changed since that far-off day when Mary busied herself about the house. A hard, flat loaf, eaten with a little salt, some green olives, a cup of water, camel-milk for the children, dried figs for dessert. There you have the uniform menu, unchanged for the centuries. I ate that meal in a Christian-Arab home, to which I was invited. We sat on the mud-floor.

When I was about to leave and wanted to pay there was genuine indignation.

"But you are our guest," said the host. "All we have is yours!" All we have!

I walked back to Jerusalem to give myself some exercise. They say it is not safe to be abroad at nights in the Holy Land. I saw nothing alarming. I heard not a sound but my own footsteps. The earth was dead. The sky had disappeared. A primordial silence hung over the land, mysterious and brooding. Growth was in the air. . . .

Brethren Under the Skin!

New York Skylines

BY CHARLES ESTCOURT JR.

Copyright, 1934 for The Constitution and North American Newspaper Alliance

NEW YORK, May 25.—Alfred E. Smith, who is still "the governor" in this town, knows New York as few men do—high life, very high indeed, and very, very low life, and the solid, nine-to-five, in-between life.

He can sit the rest of his life and do nothing but tell stories about the town, most of them fascinating. The other day he sat with his feet on a window sill of the Empire State Club and peering out over a vast tower-studded panorama of the city whose heart he owns, he told a couple. Mr. Smith, the column's yours.

"The governor" had been started on the subject of the city charter. "It's twice as long as the Bible," he said, "and I don't think there's a man alive who has read it through. I served on three charter revision committees in my time and once I started out to read the thing. I got as far as the ordinance prohibiting residents of the city of New York from sleeping in outhouses. I had taken the law against lighting a cigaret or a cigar or a pipe in Central Park in stride. But that last one was too much. I gave up.

"Well," he said, and there was a twinkle in his eye as his jaw jutted out in the familiar fighting pose and his teeth ground together, "If you want an idea of what that charter is like, let's look at the record. I once knew a man named Mulroy, a fine citizen. He spent a lifetime on the New York police force and finally retired on a pension. After 30 years of pounding pavement, he yearned for the country life. So out he went to the then village of New Utrecht, near Coney Island. The council got the idea that a good city cop would make a good village constable, so Mulroy became a sergeant on the New Utrecht police force.

"Now, just hold your horses," roared "the governor," "and this story will get good pretty soon. In course of time, the village of New Utrecht was incorporated in the city of Brooklyn, part of the agreement being that the police and fire departments should be taken over intact. So Mulroy became a sergeant on the Brooklyn police force. A few years later, Brooklyn became a borough of the city of New York under a similar agreement. And now Mulroy was a sergeant on the New York police force, from which he had retired as a patrolman.

"I knew him myself. We laughed over it together, his drawing a pension as a cop and a salary as a sergeant fro the same city department. Some old lady in pants finally decided that would never do. But Mulroy carried the case to the supreme court and it sustained him. He drew double pay to the day of his death. And he was entitled to it—under the city charter."

A TOUGH HOUR.

A short while later "the governor" was looking back to the days when he was a resoundingly "happy warrior."

"I suppose," he mused, if I ever get time to look back. I'll realize I've had a pretty busy life. Some tough hours in it, too.

"I remember one night coming down from Albany to make a speech to a bunch of lawyers. I walked into the Commodore, and a short, fat excited woman grabbed the lapels of my overcoat and shouted into my face: 'He no shoota! He no shoota'!

"I knew who she was. Just the day before I had spent four hours with her and her lawyers while she begged me to pardon her son, who was to be executed for killing a man in a stick-up. A cold-blooded, deliberate murder. I could do nothing.

"'You come with me', I told her. I took her up to my room and locked everybody out. I wa ted to make her understand why I could do nothing, why nobody on this earth could do anything now for her son except a priest.

"We sat face to face, alone, in this duded-up room—a bood-a-wah, it looked like and smelled like. I don't think I've ever had a more miserable job, but when that woman left she was satisfied that the state was not a criminal for taking her boy's life.

"What did I say to her? Well, you could shoot me and I wouldn't remember."

It was late afternoon and the shadow of the Empire State building plunged athwart the city, and, from the window, it could be seen lying like a black wound on the Hudson river clear across the Jersey shore.

"They tell me," said the governor, "that it reaches out five or six miles. That's size, isn't it?"

Someone began slyly to prod the governor about the dirigible mooring mast on top of the building.

"Now, I'll tell you the story about that thing," he responded. "They spent sixty thousand good dollars to build that and then they found that the uprush of air along the building's side would rip the nose off any dirigible that moored there. The boys down in Washington told me that. 'What do you do at Lakehurst'? I asked them. And I found out that they weight the ship down with 15 tons of lead. My first idea was that oughtn't to cost much. But then I figured the things are about 400 feet along. Hold on a minute, I said to myself. That would mean 15 tons of lead hanging over Fifth avenue and 36th street. The department store might not like that. And even if they did, the people on the streets wouldn't.

"So that's why that $60,000 mast of ours is up there catching lightning as a career."

Mr. Smith is sparkling and fit, brimming over with gusto, with joy at living, with a happy sort of pugnacity. He is said to be typical of New York, but this reporter has never met anyone like him—here or anywhere else.

Magic Music

I dreamed I died and went to hell.

And lo, a miracle befell:
The pains of hell had lost their sting.
Sweet Shirley sang, and in a trice
Where had been hell was paradise.

The Human and the Economic.

A rather curious popular fallacy is that economic laws are "natural laws." Men talk of economic laws in terms of physical science, as if they were dealing with a constant order of events, which cannot be changed or modified. They talk of the "law of demand and supply" as if it were as inevitable and unchangeable as the law of gravity. They insist that if we will leave business alone, the law of "demand and supply" will make an equitable adjustment of wealth, just as water will ever seek its own level. This will account for the gulf which has been dug between the human and the economic and for the dehumanizing of business.

Is the law of "demand and supply" a physical law? When you are searching for the source spring of "demand" you will find it in the invisible and intangible realm of the spirit of a man. It is nothing less than the human impulse, "I want." So that the real dynamo which drives the wheels of industry, lifts its weights, and transports its products, is psychic and not physical. Silence the voice of "I want" in the breasts of men and instantly you paralyze the energies of the entire commercial and industrial world. Rivers would go on singing their songs to the sea, but would turn no wheels. Electricity would continue to flash fire in the heavens, but would feed no dynamos.

Beginning of Business.

Here is the beginning of all business, or trade. I want something you have, and you want something I have. It is nothing more or less than the exchange of human desires. Here is the working of the law of "demand and supply" in its simplest form. But if business had been content to merely supply the wants which it found awakened in men, it would have remained a very small enterprise. Because the wants of men were very few and primitive. Business, however, made a revolutionary discovery. It discovered that you can awaken, stimulate and multiply new wants in men. That you can create "demand" for that which you can "supply." Here is the philosophy of advertising and the science of salesmanship.

So modern business teaches the "psychology of salesmanship," having discovered that business is controlled, not by a physical but a psychic law. So they raised advertising to an art and salesmanship to a science. The wants of men were multiplied, until the circumference of their desires circled things and ministries beyond the wildest dreams of our fathers. At the same time, business invented "mass production," so that by improved machinery and methods, it could match this well-nigh insatiable "demand," with "supply."

This was the situation, when, almost suddenly, the merchants and manufacturers of the world found their storehouses of goods stocked with unsalable commodities. They called it "overproduction." But they had not produced more than people "wanted," nor more of those things which they desperately needed. What was wrong? In their blind faith in "demand and supply" as an inevitable physical law, they had failed to understand a vital human element of its working. If there is to be a sale, I must not only want what you have, but I must have something which you want, which is my purchasing power.

Government and Business.

The truth is that business, in its blind greed, had created a human "demand" equal to its enormous "supply," but failed to provide a purchasing power to keep pace with that "demand." "I want" is a human "demand," but before it can become an "economic demand" there must be added the purchasing power, equal to the want. Here is the stupendous blunder which business has made. Here is the tragic denouement of business uncontrolled and undirected. In the presence of that tragedy we hear again its demand to be free from the "interference" of government.

Let us face the fundamental truth, once more, that in a democracy, the government is not some alien power. It is absolutely the only organized instrument for the expression of the will of all the people. It is the only agency by which all the people can protect and promote their vital interests. When we remember that in the contagion of our modern life, these interests are woven into the warp and woof of our business life, it is inevitable that if we are to have any say-so, or any part, in the protection of those interests, it must be through and by our government.

Since government is the only organized agency which can act for the welfare of all the people, by the very law of democracy, if business is not to be the master, but the servant of our civilization, then government must control business. That is only another way of uttering the fundamental American thesis, the people must govern themselves. I am not here discussing the form of that control. That is indeed an arena for full and free discussion. But we shall not have reached our ideal of democracy, until the principle of the right of the people to govern their entire life is granted.

Urges Need for Sounder Methods of Education

Editor Constitution: I read with much interest a recent editorial in your valuable paper in which you contrasted the work or results of the English and American schools. To my way of thinking, you are quite terse in what you say. The late Dr. Small, Dr. James Dillard and many others have spoken very plainly concerning superficial work and overemphasis on nonessentials.

Indeed there are teachers and institutions doing excellent and untiring services and turning out products of which they may well feel proud. I am sure the public realizes the debt owed to these tireless men and women. While the foregoing is true, it is also obvious that there is a hurry, make haste, let's get through mania affecting many of our institutions. Some writer called it degree fever and credititisis.

Your great paper is doing much good along this line. It is a serious blunder to rush the youth through school without inculcating the proper habits of study. They pass on to college and out in the world and make misfits, thus creating a social and economic problem.

Suggests Making 'Possum Poke' in 'Possum Lane' Lasting Shrine to Genius of Governor Osborn

By FRANK W. PENNELL.
(For The Constitution.)

Mid-winter in north Michigan. A train is speeding eastward from Trout Lake Junction to the Soo. At a dimly lighted station, four men, long unshaven, shaking the snow from their rough woodsmen's clothes, enter the crowded smoker—blending in with other woodsmen, similarly dressed.

"More lumberjacks," explained my father to me, "heading for town and a big drunk."

Just then one of the new arrivals glanced in our direction, shoved out his big hand in welcome, smiled in an infectious way, and said cheerily to my dad: "Helloa, Jim, glad to see you!"

Thus was my first introduction to Chase S. Osborn, destined in a few years to become one of Michigan's greatest governors and a power in the republican party nationally, and to acquire world-wide fame for knowledge and versatility in fields almost too numerous to mention.

Out of the side pockets of his mackinaw coat came a big hunk of jerked venison for a hungry boy and right then and there was cemented a friendship that has steadily deepened—the beginning of a sort of hero worship on the part of the boy that has only intensified with the swift passage of the years.

My next experience with Governor Osborn came when, as a junior at the University of Michigan, I was elected a delegate to the republican state convention at Detroit, held, as I remember, in the Light Guard armory. It was a critical time in the political affairs of the state. The great building was packed to suffocation but the wheels were at a complete standstill awaiting the arrival of Governor Osborn from the capitol with his keynote speech.

When finally he did arrive, however, he took the time on his way to the speaker's platform to pause and visit for several minutes, while the celebrities waited, with this same unimportant young man whom he remembered as a hungry kid on a train years before.

And then that never-to-be-forgotten trip a little later to Lansing, together with other aspiring young newspapermen at Ann Arbor, to be royally entertained at the executive mansion by the governor, to be escorted almost in state by his aids through the governmental buildings, and to be introduced to everybody of importance.

An Invitation to "Possum Poke."

Seems but yesterday—that trip to the capitol—but it was at least 25 years ago, and while I have since endeavored to keep in touch with affairs back in my native state of Michigan, my contact with Governor Osborn was completely broken until in January, of this year, when I received a hand-written letter, in his inimitable style, from his winter home, "Possum Poke in Possum Lane," Poulan, Ga., a letter warm with friendship and good will, and expressing the desire that if ever I came south I would make him a little visit. "You will find our lodge rude and simple but I am sure that our hospitality will make up for that," the letter concluded.

One of the chief delights of "Possum Poke" is its seclusion and distance from the main highways, and the flow of commerce and of tourist traffic through the south. Located in Worth county, it can be reached best by going almost due south from Atlanta some two hundred miles, or by traveling straight west from Brunswick, Ga., about an equal distance on state and county roads, none too good in spots.

The Brunswick route might be found uninteresting to most people but as a former Michigander I found it strangely reminiscent of my native state as it was 35 years ago. Mile after mile the roads wind through sparsely settled forests of pine, here and there decimated by fire, now and then interrupted by some little saw mill town clinging to the banks of a stream, or sprawling itself about a railroad line laid unevenly across the flat expanse of country.

We reached Poulan about mid-afternoon and received final directions from the first person we talked to in the tiny town.

"Governor Osborn's place? Sure thing—down this road 'you all' will see a schoolhouse. Back of the schoolhouse two roads come together and if you will just follow down the lane that bears to the right, you will be right 'thar'."

And in a few moments "we were right 'thar'"—at the gateway of the quaint little retreat that has been the governor's winter home for over 40 years; to be greeted by Chris, his faithful chauffeur, and all-around man; by "Mammee," a delightful, aged colored woman who presides over the kitchen, and by a whole army of chickens, ducks, geese, turkeys, guinea hens and dogs, looking for attention and for the morsel of food inevitably to be had.

"The governor is getting ready to go quail hunting," we were informed by Chris, "but drive your car in and we will go down to the lodge and meet him there."

A Rare Welcome.

To be greeted by Governor Osborn under any circumstances is an event long to be remembered; to be greeted by him when you are unexpected and when for months he has been pretty much alone with his books and papers and studies and writings—well, that's something never to be forgotten.

"And to think that you have come all this way just to see me," he said, after a big bear hug, "that's splendid, and I couldn't think more of you if you were my own children. Why, you are children—my children—and everything in this place is yours."

With just two more days before the close of the quail season we insisted that nothing should interfere with his afternoon's hunting, so presently he was off in his station car, accompanied by his daughter, Chris, and two fine pointers, leaving us to explore "Possum Poke."

As compared with the tremendous plantation estates that wealthy people have acquired in eastern Georgia, particularly in the vicinity of Sea Island, "Possum Poke" is a veritable toy, but one is left with the strong impression that mere acreage and great buildings have nothing at all to do with peace of mind, contentment and infinite happiness.

"Possum Poke" may comprise as much as three or four acres, if that much. About its confines run white painted fences, in its center a pole flaunts an American flag proudly to the skies, toward the south a row of tall pines form a pipe organ for the vagrant winds that come scampering through from the Gulf of Mexico, or the wide Atlantic to the east. There are neat quarters for the colored help, a small solarium for tropical plants and flowers, housing for a 600-foot well of excellent water, neat pathways paved with white gravel, and lined with flowers and shrubs, a vegetable garden and, beyond, a flourishing little grove of pecan trees.

"Big" and "Little" Poke.

To be accurate, one should mention that there are really two "Pokes"—"Big Poke" which is exclusively for the use of guests, and "Little Poke," a newer structure where the governor is ever actively at work with his writings and extensive correspondence, and in the back of which are his sleeping quarters.

It was to "Big Poke," therefore, we repaired ourselves and awaited before a cheerful hearth-fire the return of the hunting party, the while entertaining ourselves with looking at the many hunting pictures on the walls and talking with "Mammee" in her immaculate kitchen.

Afternoon faded into night, the sweet song of mocking birds stilled into sleep, the brilliant stars came out to festoon the tall sentinel pines with necklaces of scintillating diamonds, from afar came drifting in the fragrance of newly turned furrows, quietude reigned in the poultry yard except for the raucous cries of guinea hens secreted under the hedge, supper, long since prepared, cooled itself in the kitchen—and still no return of the hunters.

Finally, a hearty voice in the yard, and the appearance in the lodge of the governor—wet from foot to eyebrows from a fall in a creek, and cold from a seven-mile drive back home through the freezing weather.

"Well, anyway," he said, in apology for delaying the meal, "I guess my eye is still good. Only had three shots and I made all of them—two rabbits and a snipe, but the quail were flushing far ahead of the dogs, and I guess I'll have to hustle tomorrow if I am to round out the season's bag to an even hundred."

To have the privilege of hearing the governor ask the blessing is a soul-satisfying experience far richer than the services of the finest cathedral in the world. The simplicity of the man, his reverence for his God, his thankfulness for life, his appreciation of friendship, his veneration of country, his humbleness amid the works of his Creator—all expressed in that vibrant, eager, musical voice which has enthralled audiences throughout the world—who has ever had such an opportunity who could ever possibly forget, or fail forever after to be more humble and more reverent!

As for the supper itself—well, the blessing asked, rollicking good humor prevails, you get no more butter until you have finished what remains on your plate, if you would like another yam you may have to catch it on the fly, and guest and servant alike is face to face with such a barrage of wit and raillery as must have been typical of the festive boards of the kings of old.

The Zero Hour.

Nine o'clock has come and 9 o'clock at "Possum Poke" is the absolute zero hour. The zero hour, because all clocks at the "Poke" are set hours ahead, and promptly at 3 o'clock in the morning, by your time or mine—every morning in the year—the governor is up and at work, and at 5 o'clock the bell on Mammee's back porch peals out its breakfast announcement.

Untried to such an experience, and tired after hundreds of miles of motoring, we failed to respond to the enchanting sorcery of the bell, and when finally we did appear, it was to meet this chiding, good-natured comment of the governor:

"First house guests that I have had in my more than 40 years in Georgia who didn't get up in time to listen to my Presbyterian mass and to have breakfast with me."

With our departure that morning on the northerly trek homeward, comes to an end this short recital of a pilgrimage to the Georgia home of a man whom countless people regard, and the writer is happy to be included among that number, as one of the most brilliant, most learned and most beloved men who has ever graced the pages of history. In the eyes of the people of Georgia he belongs to Georgia, out in Indiana where he was born they claim him as a Hoosier, in Michigan where most of his business and political life has been spent, he is regarded as their greatest son, but in reality he belongs to America and to the world.

And I submit that some day—and let us hope and pray that that day is many years removed—that little old retreat down in the "Cracker" country of south Georgia, just north of the Florida line, will be a national shrine dedicated to the memory of a man unique in the annals of America—journalist, statesman, philosopher, author, naturalist, explorer, world traveler, sportsman, orator, lumberman, miner, scientist—but, above all, to those of us who have known him personally—"Friend"—in the most exalted and highest meaning of the word.

New Deal Re-Affirms American Faith And Embodies Essence of Jeffersonian Principles in View of This Georgian

Editor Constitution: The current criticism that the New Deal is un-American and contrary to the principles of Jeffersonian democracy is the veriest tommyrot. On the contrary the New Deal embodies the very essence of Jeffersonian democracy and is a resurgence and restoration of the American spirit. A reaffirmation of the American faith.

Labels and symbols often obscure real thinking. The cry of "back to Jefferson and Jackson" and to "fundamental American principles" is usually a substitute for mental effort, a smoke screen to hide the lack of ratiocination. You cannot lift a catchword, a slogan, a phrase or sentence out of the context of Jefferson's writings and claim that you have set forth his political philosophy. You likely do violence to the spirit of his philosophy instead. Interpretations of "fundamental American principles" can easily become frozen, arrested, static. Stagnation of thought results and growth is denied unless interpretation keeps abreast of changed social, political and economic conditions.

The tenet of Jefferson most frequently cited is that "The least possible government is the best possible government." What did Jefferson mean by that? Remember, he lived in a simple agrarian society. Industrialism was still in the future with its benefits, problems and abuses. The political background was monarchy with its authoritarian, arbitrary and ruthless exercise of power. Jefferson simply meant that government should be adequate—no more, no less. That government should exist for man—and not man for government. That, in the great American experiment, care must be taken to respect the integrity of the individual and that his freedom must be protected from the crushing hand of tyranny.

The fundamental purpose of government is protection. This motive tended to create the first society and has integrated all succeeding societies. Jefferson was chiefly concerned with protecting the liberties of man from political tyranny. The New Deal is chiefly concerned with protecting the liberties of man from economic tyranny. Growth of our country, expansion of industry, concentration of wealth and the manifold complexities of modern civilization render totally inadequate the kind of government that would have been fully adequate in Jefferson's day. If alive today, he would be quick to maintain that government must be adequate to the exigencies of every situation. That democracy must marshal its forces to triumph over every crisis.

Jefferson was this nation's first democrat. The New Deal is simply a battle for democracy. Jefferson was a great humanitarian: the New Deal's chief concern is to protect the common man's right to live, his right to work, his right to health, his right to some measure of decency and comfort. Jefferson was the foe of privilege: the New Deal aims to restore the benefits of our great wealth and natural resources to the use and enjoyment of the people.

"We are witnessing the battle of the century: the battle of democracy against financial oligarchy. Woodrow Wilson began it. He called it the New Freedom. The World War intervened. Many years were lost under Harding, Coolidge and Hoover. The evils, which Justice Brandeis so clearly pointed out the latter part of 1913, were not checked, incubated during the twenties under the warm approval of the republican party and finally hatched disaster in 1929.

I think that Thomas Jefferson would bestow his full blessing on the New Deal. FRANK A. SMITH.

Portraits of Noted Georgians, In Replica, Given Many Schools

State-wide interest has been evidenced in the recent completion of 16 portraits of illustrious Georgians by the noted Atlanta artist, Lewis C. Gregg and following a veritable deluge of requests made by librarians and educators that the paintings be made available to schools and other institutions, the officers of the Trust Company of Georgia, in Atlanta, where the originals are hung, decided to reproduce the entire collection in a striking monotone print 20 by 24 inches and offer it framed under glass as a gift to institutions.

The beautiful reproductions have been presented to the Carnegie Library, Peacock school, Sacred Heart school, Emory University, Woodrow Wilson College of Law, Girls' High school, Washington Seminary, Atlanta Law school, Commercial High school, Tech High school, North Avenue Presbyterian school, Evening School Division of the University of Georgia, North Fulton High school, Georgia Military Academy, University school, Chamblee school, Fulton High school, Brookhaven school, Southern Dental College and Georgia Tech.

Announcement that the framed print was available for donation to institutions met with instant response—a response that was almost overwhelming. More than 400 schools, colleges and libraries requested the reproduction the first week following the offer.

Just Cause For Pride

The state has just cause for the pride with which she points to her gifted sons and daughters. They have contributed much to the enactment of her glorious pageant of history. Through the corridors of immortality stride an assemblage of Georgians the equal of which can be boasted by but few commonwealths.

Hung on the walls of the banking institution at the suggestion of Mrs. T. K. Glenn, wife of Thomas K. Glenn, president of the trust company, the original paintings of illustrious Georgians are considered to be among the best existing likenesses of the men and women they depict.

The central portrait of the group replica, appropriately enough, contains the likeness of Button Gwinnett, George Walton and Lyman Hall, the Georgians who signed the Declaration of Independence. Grouped around this painting in tasteful array are reproductions of the paintings of General James Edward Oglethorpe, founder of the colony; William Harris Crawford, United States treasurer and ambassador to the court of Napoleon, Rebecca Latimer Felton, the first woman to become a United States senator; Tomochichi and his nephew, Tocanahowi, chief of the Yamacraw Indians and friend of Oglethorpe's colonists; the Rev. John Wesley, founder of Methodism; Crawford W. Long, discoverer of anaesthesia; Sidney Lanier, noted poet; Eli Whitney, inventor of the cotton gin; Joel Chandler Harris, writer of the famous Uncle Remus stories; Alexander H. Stephens, vice president of the Confederate States of America; Josiah Meigs, first president of Franklin College, later the University of Georgia; Henry W. Grady, editor and orator; Robert Toombs, soldier, statesman and orator; Frank L. Stanton, first poet laureate of Georgia, and Lucius Quintus Cincinnatus Lamar, justice of the United States supreme court.

One cannot help, in gazing on the group with being struck by the versatility of the state's great men and women. Representative they are of the finer and higher concepts of life that lead to immortality. Religion, the arts, statesmanship, invention and progress, humanitarian service and pioneering—surely one cannot but be a better Georgian for having looked upon the portraits of these men and women.

May, June in Vegetable Garden

By W. ELBRIDGE FREEBORN

The latter part of May or the early part of June is the usually accepted time for the planting of cauliflower plants. However, some successful cauliflower growers start cauliflower from seeds, the first couple of weeks in June and transplant to the open early in July.

In spite of the fact that cauliflower belongs more or less to the cabbage family and requires more or less the same cultivation, it grows at its best during the summer time, while cabbage are generally grown as a spring and fall crop.

Cauliflowers are the most tempting of vegetables in appearance, particularly on show tables and as displayed in markets. The snowy heads are always attractive and the production of cauliflower of as attractive appearance as professional growers turn out is a worthy ambition of the home gardener, and one he can easily accomplish.

They are no more difficult to grow than cabbage, need exactly the same condition, the same protection from the green "worms" that speedily riddle the leaves ,and the same cultivation. The extra care they demand is the protection of the "flower" or curd. When the tiny white button appears in the center of the plant the grower must begin looking after his cauliflowers if he wants to develop this miniature head into a big, snowy flower. They must be protected from direct sunlight if they are to come fine and white. Exposed to the sunlight they will develop green and yellow coloring that is not attractive.

The protection consists of tying the big leaves that surround the flower by the tips so they will shade the developing curd. These big leaves should be tied loosely so that they will not cramp or crowd the development of the head. This should have room to develop evenly and naturally.

Cauliflowers in the home garden can be placed more closely in the rows than in field culture, as they will be tended by hand and will stand 18 inches apart happily under these conditions of hand cultivation. There was formerly a belief that the cauliflower was much more tender and difficult to grow than the cabbage. This is not true. It will thrive equally well with its close relative under the same conditions of good soil and culture.

Carrots.

For the summer and fall gardens one of the favorite vegetables is the carrot. The favorite market variety here in Atlanta is the early Chantenay, a half-long, well-shaped, well-colored variety.

There are two very important cultural directions concerning carrots. The first has to do with the shape of the root. In other words, in order that the roots may be round, well colored and tapering slightly, the ground should be well prepared and very mellow. The reasons for this are obvious.

On the other hand, if carrots are planted in very heavy clay soil the root has a tendency to be ill-shaped, sometimes even split.

The second important cultural direction has to do with fertilization, and is closely connected with the coloring of the carrot. For the carrot to be the proper orange color it should be grown rapidly, well nourished with plenty of well-balanced commercial fertilizer, such as 10-4-4.

For carrots to be at their best for table use they should be grown rapidly and pulled early. For this reason it is best that a small amount of them be planted about once every ten days or two weeks. They may be planted from now until about the first or fifteenth of September in this latitude.

Gourds.

The ornamental gourds are always very interesting, and it so happens that they are very easy to grow. They will grow in almost any sort of soil, but should not be planted close to any of their cousins, the pumpkins or the squashes. If they are planted close to them they are liable to cross and the edible vegetables will have a bitter taste.

The favorite variety is the dipper gourd. No real spring is complete without at least one gourd dipper. These same dippers are used a great deal for martin nests, and are really appreciated by these birds. These nest-egg gourds are the little fellows that our grandmothers used to help in darning socks.

These are sometimes used as nest eggs. Some of the larger sorts are often used to fashion baskets, poultry nests and water dishes for the poultry. Another sort has been used for wash cloths or dish cloths. At least the insides are used for this purpose. But aside from the practical use of these fellows they are most interesting when used for vines, and really give a change that is most effective.

Turnips.

The old standby anywhere in the south is the turnip. There are probably more turnips planted in the south in the fall than all of the other vegetables combined. By this we do not mean to imply that the other vegetables will not grow well in the fall. It does mean that long ago turnips were found to be very satisfactory for the fall garden, just as we are learning each year that more and more vegetables will grow well during the late summer and early fall.

The turnip is such a well-known vegetable that it seems superfluous to talk about and describe its uses other than to say that it is invaluable.

Turnips will do best planted on new ground, but this is not absolutely essential. If stable manure is to be used it should be worked into the soil about two or four weeks before the actual planting of seeds. Care should be taken that the stable manure is well rotted and thoroughly worked into the soil. Apply a liberal application of some good commercial fertilizer at the time of planting, repeating this fertilization about three weeks after the turnips have been out of the ground. If the turnips grow fast the greens are much more tender and palatable. Use about one ounce of seed for each one hundred feet of row.

The best turnip for the earliest planting, that is, for planting in June and early July, is our old-fashioned rutabaga. No fall garden is at all complete without this addition. In fact, no vegetable dinner served in the fall is complete without the presence of a dish of mashed rutabagas.

The standard variety of turnip used in north Georgia almost to the exclusion of the other varieties, is the purple top globe. It is a white, globe-shaped variety with a purple or red top. It makes a fairly good amount of greens and at the same time makes these most delicious turnips.

There is a new variety that is meeting with much success throughout the south, a recent introduction from Japan. This variety makes an unusual amount of very fine greens, and at the same time produces excellent roots. The root is pure white, about the size of purple top globe, and its greatest plea for mention in the Hall of Fame is that it is louse-resistant. This is hard to believe, yet there have been cases of lice destroying purple top globe and not touching this Japanese turnip, where they were planted in the same field. For a good early variety of turnips, plant a few flat Dutch. For a yellow variety, use yellow globe, and for the stock or chickens use cowhorn.

WHAT TO DO IN MAY.

PRUNING: All of the flowering shrubs that have bloomed this spring such as January jasmine, forsythia, Japanese quince, spirea thunbergi may and should be pruned now. The other flowering shrubs that will bloom before June should be pruned directly after flowering.

FERTILIZING: Fertilizer for the lawn, flowering shrubs, flowers and vegetables should be at this time of the year a high-grade commercial fertilizer which is very active. This fertilizer should be a complete plant food with an analysis of 10-4-4.

SPRAYING: Roses should be sprayed every two weeks with Massey Dust. For all kinds of insects that appear, use a Pyrethrum spray. For mildew on crape myrtle, scale on privets and ligustrums, use Volck or any good oil emulsion spray. Peach trees should be sprayed with mulsoid sulphur and arsenate of lead during the spring and summer. Use Pyrox for apples, pears and plums.

The Happenings of The Church World

BY HERMAN L. TURNER, Atlanta, Ga.
Pastor, Covenant Presbyterian Church

"A Tide Coming In"—Dr. Arthur Burd McCormick comments in "The World As I See It:" "Long views are encouraging. At the meeting of the National Committee for Religion and Welfare Recovery in Chicago, recently it was pointed out that in 75 years the citizens of America multiplied their houses of worship almost seven-fold. Thirty million of us go to church every week. A trend toward decreasing sectarianism, constantly increasing unity within Protestantism, a strong movement for co-operation among the major faiths, a gain in the proportion of men who are members of churches, a vigorous youth movement, a marked growth of social consciousness betoken a strong tide flooding in from the great deep of God's grace which will lift us from the mud flats where our pessimism has stranded us."

"Religion Coming Back" is the title of an editorial in a recent issue of the Presbyterian Banner: "Religion appears to be coming back in Russia. On Easter in Moscow the 35 churches still open were crowded with throngs gathered outside and looking in through the windows. Atheistic opposition appears to be dying down. The soul of Russia is deeply and mystically religious and the stream driven underground is still flowing on and at times coming to the surface. On the other hand Hitlerism is growing harsher in persecution of Christians who refuse to conform to the despotic totalitarian church and increasing numbers of pastors are being sent to concentration camps. The nazi cup of iniquity is not yet full, but it is fast filling up."

One of our denominational church papers makes this comment: "On Pinning Tags:" "It is probably to be expected that in these days of tense social issues that men should be reckless in their use of labels. Such conduct can be excused on the part of those who make no pretense of Christian discipleship. It is discouraging, however, to have churchmen resort to calling names. Increasingly we note the tendency to belittle men and opinions that are disliked by such epithets as 'radical,' 'red,' 'communist,' 'socialist,' 'reactionary,' 'tory,' 'modernist,' 'fundamentalist,' etc. There are undoubtedly situations in which these words are prouerly used, but, generally speaking, people who utter them are caricaturing those with whom they differ."

"Christian" means "trained"—the evangelical church, "El Dedentor," in Carcas, capital of Venezuela, has instituted a plan by which applicants for membership must go through a two-year period of study and training before being admitted. Thus the future members will be not only zealous but well instructed in the basic teachings of Christianity, and will have proved by their lives that they wish to follow the Christian way.

Rev. B. Baez Camargo, general secretary for Mexico of the World's Sunday School Association, reports that from statistics not entirely complete it is estimated there are about 700 Sunday schools in that country, with 2,500 teachers and 40,000 pupils. Only in one or two centers has it been necessary to close any Sunday schools because of government restriction. The association is stressing more careful work and thorough training on the part of those now carrying on, rather than trying to increase in number.

"Different at Stanford"—Leland Stanford University claims to have the most representative undergraduate student body in America. For years it had the reputation of being indifferent and on occasions even hostile to the church. Thirty-seven years ago only 21 per cent of the students enrolled were members of any Christian church. In 1935, 84 per cent of the student body indicate church membership or preference. According to a recent news item, requests now come from the administration, faculty and the local church to place a university pastor among the 3,600 students in this great university.

Experience of Other Countries Reveals Evils of Public Ownership of Railroads

(From The Wheeling (W. Va.,) Intelligencer)

To this newspaper it is both surprising and disconcerting that the American people remain apparently apathetic in the face of a pronounced and well-supported movement toward public ownership of the Nation's railroads.

This newspaper is opposed to public ownership of the railroads first, because it believes the principle to be unsound, and second, because experience has proven it to be economically impracticable. Reference has been made in these columns heretofore to the experience of Canada with a successful privately-owned railroad and tragically unsuccessful publicly-owned railroads running side by side. The subject was dealt with recently in an address before the Board of Trade and Service Clubs of Vancouver, by E. W. Beatty, president of the Canadian Pacific, rival of the publicly-owned Canadian National. Describing the Canadian railroad situation as unsound and unhealthy, Mr. Beatty said:

The Royal Commission on Transportation reported that during the nine years, 1923-1931, the Canadian National Railways failed by no less than $456,063,195 to earn the interest which the government of Canada was bound to pay to private capitalists who owned the securities of that system. Whence came this sum of almost a billion dollars? You paid as much for the service of that railway system as you would if it had been privately owned, and you paid in taxes, almost half a billion dollars in those nine years to private capitalists for the privilege of saying that you owned the Canadian National Railways.

Nor is Canada alone in this experience. It is perhaps true that in every instance where public ownership was adopted as a national policy, it was thrust upon the country. In Germany and France, it was a military measure. In some of the smaller countries of Europe there was not sufficient private capital available. In each of these instances, the experiment has been costly, and, according to reliable observers, the trend in continental Europe of late is away from public ownership. In Belgium and Italy, for example, the roads have been turned over to private companies for private operation.

That has been the experience of other countries. And what has been ours with private ownership in the meantime? The answer was summed up tersely in this language several months ago by John J. Cornwell, general counsel for the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, in an address at Cumberland, Md.:

Here in the United States private capital and private initiative have constructed, taking the railroads of the United States as a whole, a system of 250,000 miles of railroad. This American system, privately owned and privately managed, has paid the highest wages and the highest taxes of any railroads in the world; it has given the best service at the lowest relative rates of any railroad system in the world, and, at the same time, the railroads have had a lower capitalization than those of any other country. From the standpoint of service, of wages, of taxes, and of rates, certainly the history of government-owned and operated railroads elsewhere does not invite government ownership in this country.

In the light of the experience of other nations with public ownership of railroads, and our war-time experience with public operation, this newspaper cannot believe that the American people are willing to take this step. But they may find they have taken it without their consent if they do not at once impress their views upon the gentlemen representing them in the congress of the United States.

Ralph in Batistaland

From The Nashville Evening Tennessean.

"Quit worrying about Cuba," is the advice of one southern observer, paying a return trip to that republic after having previously experienced some of the excitement of the revolutionary period which unseated Machado.

Ralph McGill, who was a Nashvillian until he went to Atlanta as sporting editor of The Constitution, has a fellow feeling for the Cuban people—a feeling that seems to be reciprocated. For when the island government decided it would be well to plan a tour for a group of southern writers, McGill was an invited guest.

What this gifted writer reports is more encouraging than many had been led to believe. Cuba, he maintains, is all right. It is snapping out of the depression. It has more law and order than the United States, which still doesn't mean it's a peaceful country; and it has, in McGill's estimation, a fine president in Carlos Mendieta, and a fine military dictator in "The Little Sergeant," Fulgencio Batista. As the observer naively puts it, "Batista wanted an honest man to support as head of the Cuban government; and he got him in Mendieta."

A man of natural enthusiasm for people and causes, McGill has been capitivated by the new Cuba and its leaders. And though he is one of the most democratic persons in the world, he is 100 per cent for Batista, who, he says, has saved his country from ruin and put it on the road to recovery. One feature of this prosperity movement is the increased trade with Uncle Sam, which is working out to the advantage of both nations.

Concluding an economic study of the island, McGill says: "But the story remains the little sergeant who dreamed a dream about his country and made it come true. He has restored morale, efficiency, confidence and courage; he and his honest president, that splendid gentleman and patriot, Carlos Mendieta." There seems to be no question of who's the boss, but that's all right with Ralph, too.

Knowing Yourself

By JULIAN PENNINGTON.

This is one of a new series of articles in which Mr. Pennington will aid readers of The Constitution in deciding whether they are following the pursuit for which they are best qualified.

PEOPLE ARE LIKE THIS.

If you are hungry, accept the fat woman's invitation. If you enjoy eating and want a tasty dinner, seasoned just right, the woman with the round face and full cheeks will lead you into a dining room where there is real food and much of it.

If you have a small appetite, however, and experience a sluggish feeling after a real dinner, it may be best for you to accept the invitation from the slender woman whose cheeks cave in at the outer corners of the mouth.

If her forehead is widest and fullest at the top, giving her a face shaped like the letter "V," the chances are that, instead of preparing the meal on time, she will sit, discussing the problem of whether Shakespeare or some other man by the same name wrote Hamlet, until you almost starve.

When a fat man marries a woman of this type, they never agree about food, or about literature, either, so far as that is concerned.

Did you ever study the behavior of passengers on a train about mealtimes? Well, if you have not, you have missed something.

When "dinner is served on the dining car in the rear," it is always the fat people who get jammed in the door. The other boys, however, the thin ones with hollow cheeks, are not interested until positively the last call.

Then a person of this type will walk slowly back into the dining car and look over the menu for quite a while, trying to decide what to order. Finally he will write down some small portion, and when it comes, will probably nibble at a little spinach or eat the northeast corner of a poached egg.

But not so the fat man! Pan cakes, or waffles, soaked in butter and baptized in syrup are what he first goes in for. Then his eye catches the listing of hot rolls, biscuits, rice, grits, potatoes and other starchy foods.

While he is eating, most of these along with his other orders, he cannot get his mind off the pie, cake or other sweets that would follow if he were not eating breakfast.

Believe it or not, these two types of people not only differ in their interests at the table, but they are also just as far apart in regard to their social temperament and vocational aptitude.

It is not a coincidence that the man who prefers eating starches and sweets becomes the promoter and the race horse enthusiast; nor is it by chance that the man who has the thin and hollow cheeks is the cautious, and detailed member of the firm.

The difference between these people is not due to the fact that they eat differently. They differ at the table, in the drawing room, and in the business world, because they belong to different types.

Cites Marked Expansion In Baptist Membership And Work in Recent Years

Editor Constitution: Amidst the terrific backwash of the World War and its depression and poverty, its lowering of moral standards and the influx of crime aftermaths, it is intensely interesting to note the forward movement manifesting itself in every phase of the life of southern Baptists. At Memphis last week Dr. Aldredge, secretary of the department of statistics and surveys, gave out a series of reports that created anew the spirit of optimism that has for years characterized this great religious body.

In 1935, 22,072 Sunday schools were reported with an enrollment of 3,104,411. In the last four years Baptists in the south have gained 629 additional churches and 1,393 Sunday schools, and have enrolled 4,277,052 who contribute each year $5.77 per capita. This may seem rather small in the realm of contributions but it must be remembered that this membership is drawn from the rank and file of them asses and with poverty on every side it is no mean showing. Total gifts to all purposes showed a gain of over $1,363,915, and during the year just closed 103,124 members were gained.

Much is said about flaming youth and the indifference of the young people to religion and facing such charges last year showed a gain of 2,240 new organizations for the B. T. U. with a membership gain of 31,490. Three years' gains reported are 6,889 organizations and 102,825 young people.

The W. B. M. U. organizations showed equally interesting growth during the closing year—4,030 new organizations during the year with a total membership of 571,702, and the years' contributions $1,915,803 for missions and benevolence.

Debt had worried the leaders for the last few years but the One Hundred Thousand Club has clipped the debts by $267,598.98 for year just closed.

There are over 11,698 churches that have services once each month, showing the large rural constituency.

Statistics are usually dry, but there are in the educational institutions this year 1,249 ministerial students, 883 ministers and missionaries are in training in our seminaries. Twenty-nine senior colleges, 21 junior colleges and 18 academies report a property value of $50,907,546.62. No mean showing for the times.

Atlanta Girls, Women Are Praised by Visitor

Atlanta Constitution: Going often through your city, a certain fact has so often been decidedly brought to my attention.

The fact is the sweetness of expression on the face, or in the face of your Georgia girls and women.

A womanly sweetness that she wears that helps to brave and banish cares.
There is something brave and high and fine
That seems to be almost divine.
This sweetness on her face I see
Makes me think of homes and God's Divinity.
This is not a compliment, it is an analysis.

Sunshine Message to Graduates

The nice spring sunshine has a message,
Something sweet and fine and true.
Watch the flutter of the tree tops
As the breeze passes through.
Catch the whisper of the breezes
As they try to talk to you.

There are secrets in the message
Life unfolds in all her dreams;
Some are kind and very gentle
Flowing down a silvery stream.
Others come in turbulent measure,
Disregarding your dismay;
But you must go bravely forward
From your graduation day.

Try to hear God's gentle voice
Guiding you from year to year.
Know He's standing close beside you
When your problems are not clear;
Tell Him that your hours are sweetest
When the time has come to pray.
He will tread life's journey with you
From your graduation day.

JEPTHA LONG MILLER.

Rain

Rain is falling in torrents outside
But oh! its freshness is sweet;
We know it's a blessing from Him above
There's life when rain and earth can meet.

Plants take on new life and beauty
After a good hard shower—
We know God's blessings are with us
When the rain shows us His power.

He sends the seasons each year
The loveliest of all is spring—
With showers and sunshine everywhere
New life to the earth to bring.

When rain is falling outside
And clouds are heavy and dark—
'Tis then that God is nearest
And there's peace within my heart.

By FRANK MacMILLEN.

NEW YORK, May 25.—(AP)—Currency clouds drifted across the financial horizon today, bringing moderate selling into the share market from investors and traders nervous over the fate of Europe's gold bloc.

Brokers ascribed Wall Street's unrest principally to the hoist in the Bank of France discount rate from 3 to 4 per cent. Coming on the heels of Thursday's lift from 2 1-2 to 3 per cent, they said it was symptomatic of increased tension arising from the continued flight of capital from France.

Financial opinion was sharply divided on the possible market effect which collapse of the gold bloc might bring. Some said it could produce a passing wave of share liquidation. Others declared a breakdown of the gold bloc would clear the decks for stabilization of currencies and thus stimulate world trade revival.

In addition to selling which the gold bloc doubts were believed to have stimulated, brokers noted the usual week-end liquidation by traders and a scattering of sales from investors who felt that domestic trade visibility remained poor.

The market gave little heed to Cram's report of automobile production which disclosed a sharp increase for the week ended May 25. The estimate stood at 100,705 units, compared with 89,760 in the preceding week.

Season Stock.

The imminence of the slack season for the industry and the fact that the rise resulted largely from the resumption of operations by Chevrolet accounted for the market's indifference, analysts said.

In terms of the Associated Press average of 60 stocks, the market eased .1 of a point to 42.2. Transactions for the two-hour period totaled 492,830 shares.

Equities which closed fractionally lower included United States Steel at 34 3-8, Woolworth at 59 7-8, American Smelting at 45 1-2, Bethlehem Steel at 27 3-8, International Harvester at 42 3-4, Radio at 5 3-8 and Union Carbide at 59 3-4.

Preferred issues had a two-way movement, although there were some gains of 1 to 3 points or more.

Bonds Steady.

Bonds were steady in both the government and corporate divisions.

Corn closed with losses of 3-4 to 1 1-2 cents a bushel, while wheat slumped 7-8 to 1 1-4 cents. Stimulated by the renewal of talk in Washington in favor of a 12-cent loan for the new crop, cotton bucked up for net gains of 10 to 75 cents a bale.

The pound sterling finished 3 cents lower at $4.94. The French franc, strong at one time, held a gain of only .00 1-4 of a cent to 6.58 1-2 cents, which left it still around the gold shipping point.

Measured by the Associated Press average, the stock market ended the week at 42.2, up .4 of a point from the preceding week.

The prime market development on the week was the setback to inflation sentiment caused by the senate's upholding of President Roosevelt on the bonus veto.

The business brew was mixed and failed to season the market much one way or another. Retail trade was down, steel operations slower. A slightly more than seasonal gain in carloadings about offset a similar decline in electric power production.

By G. A. PHILLIPS.

NEW YORK, May 25.—(AP)—The bond market appeared a little tired today after Friday's stiff workout and quoted values remained almost stationary.

Sales dropped to $4,132,000, par value, compared with $5,260,000 last Saturday and the Associated Press averages were unchanged to .2 of a point higher.

While there were numerous individual exceptions, the main body of bonds ended the session in the plus column but gains were small and there were many unchanged. Further accumulation of a few issues was in evidence when new 1935 highs were established by Colon Oil 6s at 59 1-2 and East Cuba Sugar 7 1-2s at 18 1-4.

Other firm spots included two issues of New Orleans, Texas & Mexico Railroad, Purity Bakeries 5s, Southern Railway 4s of 1938, Union Pacific 4 1-2s and Bell Telephone 5s. Liggett & Myers 7s came within striking distance of the 1935 high at 132 7-8.

Easing tendencies were noted among a number of utilities and industrials. American & Foreign Power dropped to 61 3-8 but came back strongly to close at 62 1-8, off 3-8, on balance and North American Edison 5 1-2s lost 5-8 of a point at 98 7-8. Others yielding slightly included obligations of International Telephone, Postal Telegraph and Remington Rand.

United States governments were extremely quiet and the smallest of fractional changes were the rule at the end. Federal Farm Mortgage 2 3-4s and 3s were the most active issues and advanced fractionally. Treasury loans were 1-32d lower to 3-32d higher and Liberties were about unchanged.

A sharp rise in Italian bonds following announcement that the relations between that country and Ethiopia were improving featured the foreign section. The government 7s advanced 3 points to 85 3-4 and Milan 6 1-2s were about that much better. There was little change in other foreign issues.

Sugar and Coffee.

SUGAR.

NEW YORK, May 25.—Raw sugar was firm today. No sales were reported and spot prices were unchanged at 3.35. Refiners showed no general buying interest, but offerings were light and there was nothing available in any position below 3.50.

Opening advances of 2 to 4 points in futures met selling and hedge selling, but offerings were readily absorbed and following reactions to within a point of the previous close. The market firmed up again, closing at the best and 4 points net higher in the No. 3 contract and 2 to 4 higher in the No. 1. The firmness reflected the continued strength in the outside market. Sales were 5,650 tons in the No. 3 contract and 1,700 tons in the No. 1.

	High	Low	Last
July	2.50	2.49	2.50b
September	2.57	2.54	2.57b
December	2.62	2.59	2.62b

March	....	....	2.44b
May	....	....	2.45b

b—Bid.

Refined was unchanged at 5.25 for fine granulated. Although no new buying was in evidence, there were indications of a better withdrawal demand.

COFFEE.

NEW YORK, May 25.—The firmer Brazilian market promoted new speculative buying in coffee futures here today and prices rallied moderately.

Santos opened 7 to 10 higher and closed 7 to 11 higher; sales 14,000. No. 7 opened 10 higher and closed 7 to 8 higher; sales 1,750. Closing quotations: Santos, July 7.75, September 7.86, December 7.94, March 8.00, May 8.05; No. 7, July 5.29, September 5.42, December 5.53, March 5.62, May 5.68.

PORTRAIT OF JACOBS GIVEN TO OGLETHORPE

To Hang in Lupton Hall With Those of State's Founder.

Presentation of a portrait of Dr. Thornwell Jacobs, founder and president of Oglethorpe University, to the university took place amid appropriate ceremonies yesterday afternoon in the library of Lupton hall, on the Oglethorpe campus.

The portrait, by Charles Neagle, noted artist, was painted on order of Mrs. Willis F. Westmoreland, president of the women's board of the university, who presented it to the women's board.

At the ceremonies yesterday, Mrs. John K. Ottley, chairman of the advisory committee of the women's board, officially presented the portrait to the university, Judge Edgar Watkins, president of the board of trustees, receiving it on behalf of the institution.

The portrait will hang in Lupton hall along with portraits of General Oglethorpe, after whom the university is named. The school owns all the known portraits of the founder of Georgia.

Dedicate Lake Pheobe.

The distinguished American women who are to receive honorary degrees from Oglethorpe were present at the ceremony, coming from a tea and reception given in their honor at the Biltmore by the women's board. The assemblage later attended the dedication of Lake Pheobe, formerly Silver lake, on the university campus, presented to the institution six years ago by William Randolph Hearst.

During the dedicatory ceremonies, in which William Randolph Hearst Jr. represented his father, Governor Eugene Talmadge described the publisher as the "outstanding free-thinking writer of America."

Trio of Democrats.

Dr. Jacobs opened the ceremonies, which are a part of Oglethorpe's commencement exercises, and introduced Governor Talmadge as a "genuine Jeffersonian democrat, and said that he, himself, was another one. Congresswoman Caroline O'Day, of New York, also on the speakers' platform, a moment later said with a smile that she, too, was a "genuine Jeffersonian democrat."

"Here we are then, the three of us," Dr. Jacobs laughed, drawing the governor forward to shake hands.

"This ought to create a sensation in Washington," Congresswoman O'Day said with a smile as the three shook hands.

Mr. Hearst, acknowledging the dedication, told of the career of his grandmother for whom the lake was renamed and described her work for formation of the National Parent-Teacher Association.

OIL FIRMS MAY QUIT IOWA TO ESCAPE TAX

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 25.—(AP)—General withdrawal of the large oil companies from service station operation in Iowa because of the state chain store tax, effective July 1, was predicted today by M. L. Long, Iowa Petroleum Association secretary.

He estimated that more than 3,000 company-owned or operated stations would either be leased to individuals or closed. There are approximately 10,000 service stations in the state.

The Standard Oil Company of Indiana last night took the lead in retreat from the retail field when it announced it would lease 350 Iowa stations to individuals. The company estimated this would result in discharge of some 800 employes. Five hundred other stations leased by Standard in Iowa and operated by agents also will be turned back to private owners.

Chain stations must pay a unit tax beginning with $5 per station for each station in excess of one and running to $155 for each in excess of 50. The gross sales provision applies a tax of $25 on receipts not in excess of $50,000 and runs to 10 per cent on receipts of more than $9,000,000.

JUNE ADJOURNMENT SOUGHT BY CONGRESS

WASHINGTON, May 25.—(AP)—With proposals for federal regulation of industry and agriculture to the fore, congressional pilots today decided skillful handling would be necessary if the session's end is to be reached by early July.

Although the bonus shoal was behind—some say definitely for the session, others insisted only temporarily—the leaders agreed more speed would be needed in view of the vast controversial program remaining.

Hints were dropped that some of the legislation may be deferred until next year if it appears the session may run far into the summer. In this connection, sections of the omnibus banking bill, centralizing credit control in the Federal Reserve Board, were mentioned.

Extension of NRA.

Administration forces insisted NRA extension, public utility holding company regulation and the social security bills must pass, together with the few remaining regular appropriation measures.

House leaders have cleared the way to consider next week an NRA bill which, from all indications, will clash with the 9 1-2-month extension measure passed by the senate.

A compromise probably will result. But senate democratic chiefs today informed the house group considering the legislation that changes in the senate resolution must be kept to a minimum if legislation is to be enacted before NRA expires June 16.

While the house tackles this controversy, the senate on Monday will start its long-awaited battle over the bill to broaden the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Some of the opposition had been removed by substitution of a house bill with milder licensing provision. Consequently senate leaders believe those amendments which caused such a rumpus last session will be approved in a couple of days.

Utility Holding Companies.

The holding company bill is next on the list, to be followed by the old-age pension, unemployment insurance measure. Both will entail long debate.

The senate then will be faced with the bank bill so bitterly opposed by a long list of bankers and businessmen witnesses. The banking subcommittee headed by Senator Glass, democrat, Virginia, is scheduled to close its extended hearings on the measure next week.

The Virginian and several of his associates would like to divide the bill and postpone the reserve board sections until next year, but if the subcommittee takes this step the full committee probably will put them together again.

Chairman Harrison, of the finance committee, will begin a drive tomorrow night for the social security bill with a radio speech dealing with the old age pension features. Next Thursday he will make another broadcast on the unemployment insurance phases.

Other Bills Pending.

Outside the AAA amendments and the four major program bills remaining to be sent to the White House—NRA extension, social security, holding companies and banking—the following measures are among those in various stages of consideration:

Wagner labor board bill, passed by the senate and pending before the house labor committee; has President Roosevelt's indorsement in principle.

Navy appropriations bill carrying $460,000,000, passed by both houses, but in conference on senate amendments.

Norris bill designed to strengthen the Tennessee Valley Authority law. Passed by the senate and tabled by one-vote margin by house military committee. Proponents have said they will seek its revival.

With bonus forces undecided as to strategy, Patman leaders in both houses decide to hold another meeting next week to try to map out a program. Nothing was decided at a meeting today. Leaders in both parties in the senate expressed a belief the senate's decisive vote sustaining the president's veto of the Patman inflationary measure had shelved the issue for this session.

Senator Thomas, democrat, Oklahoma, Patman bill leader, said he had heard talk in some high quarters of deferring further attempts to pass a bonus measure until next session.

70-Year-Old Negro Chef Is Honored at Mercer

MACON, Ga., May 25.—(AP)—On a 70-year-old negro chef has been conferred an honor usually reserved for a learned professor or some other prominent figure.

Editors of the Cauldron, yearbook of Mercer University, have dedicated the annual to "General" Robert Edward Lee Battle, who has been an employe of the university for 35 years.

"Old Lee" is an institution at Mercer. At every home football game, he comes before the student section between halves and makes a "pep" talk, closing with his interpretation of a bear's growl. The school's athletic teams are known as the Bears.

Some weeks ago the students gave Battle a party to celebrate his 70th birthday. So overcome was the old negro that he could say only: "May de Lawd bless you all."

CORDELE PUPILS WIN IN U. D. C. CONTEST

CORDELE, Ga., May 25.—Two Cordele High school students, James Wilson and James Brown, have been awarded first and second places, respectively, in the U. D. C. essay contest for Georgia students.

SHIP FIREMAN DROWNS IN SAVANNAH RIVER

SAVANNAH, Ga., May 25.—(AP)—A fireman on the Norwegian steamship Tilthorn, now in port, fell overboard and was drowned early today.

Police here said the man was listed as Edward Erickson, of Bergen, Norway. The ship is docked at the Central of Georgia railway terminal and is discharging cargo.

Three police officers responded to a call early today to aid in the search for the man. A seaman aboard the ship said the fireman was returning to ship from shore leave when he slipped and fell into the Savannah river.

CARNIVAL EMPLOGE KILLTD AT ZEBULON

GRIFFIN, Ga., May 25.—An unidentified man, employe of a carnival company, was killed this morning when knocked from a truck by a passing automobile, between Griffin and Zebulon. The man was known to carnival workers only as "Shorty," and had been with the company less than a week.

He was brought to a Griffin hospital, but was dead when arrived.

The carnival company, "Big Four," was en route from Atlanta to Thomaston. It was reported the man's home was in Thomaston.

The car that sideswiped the truck is reported to have kept going, according to W. H. Goulber, Atlanta, who witnessed the accident and brought the man to the Griffin hospital.

ROOSEVELTS SEE SON ROW IN WINNING CREW

WASHINGTON, May 25.—(AP)—President Roosevelt returned to the White House tonight after an afternoon on the waters of the Severn river, watching the crew races of Navy, Harvard and Pennsylvania, at Annapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt made the occasion a family party for they were witnessing their third son, Franklin Jr., row in the Harvard junior crew. They saw the junior Harvard team beat Pennsylvania and come in second in a close finish against Navy.

Young Franklin was watched closely by his father in the referee's boat. Later the youngster joined Miss Ethel du Pont, of Wilmington, Del., who was in the presidential party.

Competition in Reno Cuts Lawyers' Income

The law business isn't what it used to be in Reno—even with the divorce practice still on the boom.

Once Reno was a Mecca for lawyers. But competition has sliced fees and the six-weeks residence law has made business relations with clients less lengthy.

While the number of divorce cases has averaged 280 a month since the six-weeks law was enacted four years ago, a majority of the "big money" cases have gone to a select few. There are about 125 lawyers practicing here now.

Most attorneys agree on a minimum of at least $150 in an ordinary uncontested case and many will not go to court for less than $250, but a few have been known to accept $50.

NEW TVA HEARING SET ON TABLED HOUSE BILL

WASHINGTON, May 25.—(AP)—Seeking to offset the blow at the Roosevelt power program by a house committee, which tabled a bill to expand the activities of the Tennessee Valley Authority, a democratic leader disclosed today that a new hearing had been ordered for next week.

Senator Norris, a father of the TVA act, hit sharply at Comptroller-General R. J. McCarl, at one time his secretary. He asserted McCarl's criticisms of TVA operations represented a "power trust attitude."

Chairman McSwain, of the house military committee, scheduled new consideration Tuesday of the bill by Norris which would broaden the activities of the valley authority and seek to circumvent recent adverse court decisions. The committee tabled such legislation yesterday by a 13-to-12 vote.

Norris told newsmen he could not explain McCarl's critical attitude toward TVA "unless it is another case of a man who got the presidential bee and was spoiled by it."

"Most of his objections were distinctly misleading and unfair to the TVA," the senator said of the TVA audit by McCarl's office. "The suggestions he made indicates he wants to dominate the TVA completely and control it in every way."

McCarl sharply questioned some of TVA's purchasing methods, and contended some of its operations had gone beyond the authority granted by congress.

McSwain declared he still had hopes of being able to reconsider the action by the military committee.

"There is no need to introduce a new bill until that hope proves vain," he said. "But I have good foundation for such hope."

He contended, however, that even if the committee took no further action the administration's power program probably would not be crippled seriously.

"These changes aren't vital," he said. "Unless the supreme court upsets the whole thing, the program won't be materially affected."

McSwain asserted changes the committee was considering originally were largely for purposes of clarification. He contended the authority still can go ahead with the Wheeler, Pickwick Landing and other dams when congress provides the money.

The Norris bill was intended to permit the sale of surplus power which has been enjoined by a federal court.

Confirming an unofficial digest of his audit as previously made public, Comptroller McCarl told the committee that TVA officials had played fast and loose with public money in large and small sums.

Summarized, his audit contained such charges against TVA officials as buying $200 cows for $1,000 each, then exchanging the milk with a dairy for other milk of 50 per cent less butter fat; spending more than $2,000,000 in an outright illegal or questionable way; incurring deficits on everything from power plants to cafeterias and explaining away shortages of hundreds of dollars by saying that children had been toying with its cash registers.

Other major irregularities complained of by Comptroller McCarl and which have left a bad taste in congress are that each of the TVA directors—Dr. A. E. Morgan, Harcourt Morgan and D. E. Lilienthal—overdrew his salary by more than $1,000 and that the agency let more than a million dollars' worth of contracts in a questionable fashion.

Stirring up a swarm of petty irregularities along with questionable larger contracts, the McCarl audit said that in commissaries, cafeterias, barber shops and other places under TVA control cash register records varied from the actual cash by anywhere from a few cents to hundreds of dollars a day. Some of the explanations made were no more illuminating than "registers jammed," "children playing with register," or "cash stolen," but no reference was made of any disciplinary action.

Mr. McCarl was particularly caustic in his criticism of the agency's lax methods in procuring transportation facilities. After telling of expensive airplanes being bought for the convenience of the directors, he said as much as $8,000 a month had been spent in hiring automobiles, exclusive of the gas used to run them; that this and other business had been awarded without competitive bidding.

"The abuse of rented cars," he pointed out, "is shown by an example where January 15-17, 1934, E. E. Neukom drove a hired car to Muscle Shoals from Knoxville and return, a distance of 694 miles, the hire being $34.70, with gas and oil made the cost to the government about $45. The round trip fare by train would have been but $11.10 plus $5 for Pullman space."

He noted a number of instances where employes used rented cars for six months or longer.

At another point in the audit McCarl disclosed basic flaws in the "yardstick" which the Roosevelt administration had in mind in setting up TVA. The agency, he found, virtually is ignoring depreciation in computing its costs. He estimated that TVA at a minimum should have laid away in its first year a million dollars for depreciation whereas actually it set aside little more than $80,000, or less than 10 per cent of proper requirements.

Finally, as an outstanding example of the agency's free and easy handling of government money, he cited a large contract for an indefinite sum, contrary to law. A contract was given the Stone & Webster engineering corporation for work estimated to cost $615,000 with the company to receive an 8 per cent fee whatever the cost. In the end TVA overpaid the company 83 cents for the work done, he found.

Jefferson Clubwomen Elect New Officers at May Meeting

Mrs. J. N. Holder was elected president of Jefferson Woman's Club at the May meeting. Elected to serve with her was Mrs. Guy Strickland, vice president. Miss Mary E. Creswell, director of home economics at the University of Georgia, addressed clubwomen on the subject, "Home Management Problems Involving Family Relationship," at the May meeting was held at the home of Mrs. J. D. Escoe, with Mesdames James Carroll, Effie Flanigan, Lewis Mobley, B. E. McCollum and Miss Rose Daniel as hostesses.

The leading thought in Miss Creswell's talk was changing conditions in the home, and how family counsels, in which parents and children unite in discussing home problems, will meet these changes. Other features were a vocal number, "In the Evening by the Moonlight," sung by Misses Thelma Lankford, Billie Hardy and Eloise Hood, and a reading, "How Hiram Saved Her Life," was given by Miss Bess Young.

The department of fine arts with Mrs. Stanley Kesler as chairman, sponsored a display at the home of Mrs. Kesler on May 17 and 18, of hand work, works of art, collections of antiques; in fact, such things as the new pattern quilts, crocheted counterpanes and bed spreads, afghans, shawls, hand-made rugs, bags, woven, crocheted and beaded, children and baby clothes, hand work on any kind of linens, antiques in quilts and counterpanes, coverlets, antique brass or china, noted and antique paintings.

The display was not confined to members of the club. Every person having some work of art, something beautiful or aesthetical, some handiwork that would interest lovers of the artistic, the beautiful and the historical are invited to bring the same to the Kesler home prior to Friday afternoon, so that the same may be arranged for display. A contribution of 10 cents was asked as admission fee.

The public welfare department, Mrs. H. E. Aderhold as chairman, presented to the club a request that the club sponsor a typhoid clinic for those on relief in the county. In view of the fact that the club had only recently held a clinic for both typhoid and diphtheria, a motion was carried to ask the Jackson county federation to be responsible for the additional clinic.

The treasurer reported $11 sent to the Tallulah Falls school. The American home department, Miss Vera Keyy, chairman, reported two units on mothercraft, completed by the pupils of the eighth and ninth grades.

Federal housing was discussed by Miss Leila Bates. Three canvasers have covered the county in interest of this important project of the New Deal, and, as a result, numbers of homes will be repaired, remodeled and modernized. Also, several new homes will be erected.

"Bird Life" was the topic stressed the past month by the department of education, Mrs. H. J. W. Kizer, chairman. Also, the club will raise funds for a scholarship to be used by Miss Leila Bates in her 4-H club work.

The treasurer of the "chain party fund" announced $30.80 already secured. When the chain is completed, the funds will be used in buying furnishings for the log cabin on the institute campus.

The nominating committee presented the names of Mrs. J. N. Holder for president, and Mrs. Guy Strickland for vice president, and they were elected.

State Club Leaders To Attend Triennial Convention in Detroit

Georgia club leaders will leave on June 1 for the Michigan metropolis, Detroit, to attend the triennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs which promises to be one of the largest and most distinguished meetings ever held by clubwomen. Waugh, of Albany, delegates from state at large; Mrs. Harry Brown and Miss Caryl Brown, of Athens.

At the close of the Michigan products dinner Tuesday evening, June 4, Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, president of the General Federation, will declare the convention in session and the first business session will be the following morning, continuing through June 12. Interest in the election of the five officers of the general federation increases, perhaps the greatest attaching to the candidates for president, Ohio's Dr. Josephine Peirce and Oklahoma's Mrs. Roberta Campbell Lawson. Both have long records of service and admirers throughout the country.

Attractive Student Aid Girls Make Excellent Speeches At Georgia Federation's Valdosta Convention

The attractive student aid girls pictured above from left to right are Miss Agnes Highsmith, of Baxley, and Miss Laura Kirkland, of Homerville. They made excellent speeches at Georgia Federation's 40th convention held in Valdosta and created a splendid impression upon their listeners. They are photographed with the flowers carried to the platform and presented by them to Mrs. W. H. Oliver, the official convention hostess. The delivery of their speeches and their charming manner won the hearts of state clubwomen.

The report of the Student Aid Foundation given on May 9 in Valdosta, carried with it some unusual features. Mrs. Charles J. Haden, chairman of the student aid committee, opened the foundation report by stating the fact that in Valdosta on November 17, 1908, the Georgia Federation of Woman's Clubs assembled in convention, incorporated into their educational program the work of student aid. As Mrs. Haden made this very interesting statement two student aid girls from the eighth district carried to the platform a basket of ascension lilies and very gracefully presented the gift to Mrs. W. H. Oliver, president of the hostess club, the Wymodausis.

Inscription on Placard.

The basket bore a silver placard with the words and dates as follows: Valdosta, 1908—1935. Student Aid Foundation. Mrs. Oliver graciously received the basket and promised that it should remain in the new woman's building as an ever present reminder of the Student Aid Foundation which had become a child of the federation in the city of Valdosta nearly 27 years ago.

Mrs. Haden's report carried three outstanding phases of the year's work. She spoke of the more thorough organization of the group of the ten district chairmen which has resulted in a broader and more generous interest in student aid. The second point stressed was the evidence of a much more definite plan of study on the part of student aid girls while in college with the view to fitting themselves for a definite field of work after graduation. The third phase of student aid brought out was the allotment of specific tasks to each member of the student aid committee, thus co-ordinating their efforts. Mrs. Haden reported 42 girls aided in school this year and $5,580 loaned to them.

Girls Introduced.

After her report the chairman introduced two of the student aid girls from the eighth district, Agnes Highsmith, of Baxley, and Laura Kirkland, of Homerville. Miss Highsmith is a graduate of Wesleyan College and is acting as assistant director of the Volunteer Religious Association in Athens. She chose as the topic of her talk, "What Student Aid Means in Terms of Character Building." Being a very attractive and charming personality, she won the hearts of her listeners by her simple but convincing way of presenting her subject.

Miss Kirkland is a junior at the University of Georgia and a leader in many of the college activities. She has held the presidency of her class for two years and is a member of several outstanding committees and is a student of unusual ability. She based her remarks on the theme, "College Education As a Road Builder," and was a fine exponent of student aid work.

The executive secretary, Mrs. E. K. Large, made a brief statement of the larger number of clubs enrolled on the various gift lists of student aid and the gratifying total of these gifts. She closed the program by a reminder to all interested friends of the foundation's memorial fund, of which Mrs. John Spalding is the chairman. That fund is now $430.65 and carries some 40 names on its list. These names bring back the memory of that other meeting in Valdosta in 1908 when 14 women brought student aid into being as a great educational feature of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs. It may be interesting to end this resume of the council report of student aid by reprinting the statements made to the president of the federation in February, 1909, by Mrs. H. B. Wey, first chairman of the student aid committee.

"Madame President: The student aid committee, created at the state meeting in November, has perfected its organization and plans for work are well under way.

"Up to date gifts and annual pledges, amounting to $226 have been collected, so that we have on deposit the nucleus for our loan fund. This plan for aid appeals to the strong, earnest girl and, at the same time, becomes a valuable part of her training and education. We earnestly desire the co-operation of all club women who can assist either through individual gifts or through personal work.

"We need at least $5,000 in order to work effectively, and our purpose is to accumulate this amount as rapidly as possible.

And so at that long-ago Valdosta convention and through the days of earnest organization that followed, the foundation of a road was builded over which 558 girls have passed to a higher education and "more abundant life."

Mrs. Fuller Elected Quitman Club Head.

At the May meeting of the Quitman Club the annual election of officers took place and Mrs. R. C. Fuller was chosen president to succeed Mrs. C. E. Glausier, who has served so ably the past two years. Mrs. A. L. Tidwell is first vice president and Mrs. A. B. Sheffield was re-elected second vice president; Mrs. C. E. Glausier was named recording secretary; Mrs. Ralph Girtman, corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. B. Baum is treasurer; Mrs. J. Harold Saxon is parliamentarian.

Board of directors is composed of Mesdames L. H. Chapman, Sam Harrell, S. N. Conner and the officers. The meeting was an important one, with the annual report of the officers and a general summing up of the year's work. Mrs. C. E. Glausier, retiring president, president of the second district federation, gave a very excellent resume of the state biennial council in Valdosta last week, as well as her club president report.

Mrs. Howard McCall, of Atlanta, state parliamentarian, was present and her discussion of parliamentary procedure was very helpful. Mrs. McCall also pleased the club members deeply in the tribute she paid Mrs Glausier. She said Mrs. Glausier had won recognition and praise in her work in the council and that her speech on president's evening was one of the finest on the program. Mrs. Albert Tidwell also echoed this tribute very pleasantly.

Mrs. Glausier's report as club president outlined the main activities. She thanked all officers and members for their good work and said it had been a pleasure to serve with them. She outlined some of the second district club work in which she is now launched as president. She said the district contributed $1,128.50 to Tallulah Falls school. The district won the award for club extension work the past year with five new clubs organized. The prize is a gavel made from the Toombs oak.

Mrs. R. C. Fuller, chairman of the finance committee, reported a benefit tea which realized $9.45; $14 made on a picture show; commissions on magazine subscriptions $20.50; the sum of $32.80 made on vanishing teas. American home division, of which Mrs. Fields Roberts is chairman, had one outstanding achievement in that through a latter written by Mrs. Roberts to Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, the assembly room has as its most prized piece of furniture a very beautiful chair sent from the Val Kill factory, which is Mrs. Roosevelt's own shop. This was sent with a charming letter from Mrs. Roosevelt in response to Mrs. Roberts' modest request merely for a letter from Mrs. Roosevelt for the scrapbook.

The garden division reported the annual camellia show as its main project, and a spring flower show. It sold camellia plants and realized $17.50 in commissions; reports great number of new camellias planted here. Fine arts department, of which Mrs Pliny Sheffield is leader, reported a delightful popular concert, realizing $12.05. Also a reception afterward for those who participated in the concert program. Welfare department chairman, Mrs. Fred Cobb, has done excellent work. Each department sponsored at least one club program during the year.

Mrs. Ritchie Addresses Winder Juniors.

Mrs. H. B. Ritchie, president of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, was the guest speaker at the May meeting of the Junior Woman's Club. With Miss Lonie Reese Couch presiding, Miss Carolyn Aiken led the flag salute. In the absence of the treasurer, Miss Couch gave the financial report. Mrs. Claud McDaniel, chairman of the nominating committee, submitted the following report: President, Miss Lonie Reese Couch, vice president, Miss Eloise Fullbright; secretary, Miss Hazel Shelnutt; treasurer, Miss Lonie Belle Carrington. This report was accepted as a whole and Miss Hazel Shelnutt, secretary, cast the ballot and also read the minutes of the previous meeting.

A dance to be sponsored by the club on July 4 was planned, and it was decided to continue the relief donation during the summer months. The president turned the meeting over to Miss Carolyn Aiken, program chairman, who presented Mrs. Thomas M. Seawell, of the senior club. Mrs. H. B. Ritchie, of Athens, state president, and principal speaker, was introduced by Mrs. A. D. McCurry. Miss Melba Woodward, accompanied by Mrs. MacPotts, sang "Mother Machree" and the song, added to the intriguing performance, was fully appreciated. The hostesses, Misses Tootsie Patrick, Jennie Smith, Henrietta McDonald and Anne Hargrove, served refreshments and a happy hour was enjoyed informally. Dr. H. B. Ritchie then joined the group. A bouquet of Madonna lilies was presented Mrs. Ritchie.

Acworth Club Closes Season.

At the May meeting of the club year, the Carrie Dyer Reading Club enjoyed a social following the program and business session. Mrs. E. M. Bailey, president of the club, gave an interesting account of the state meeting held recently at Valdosta.

At the meeting held earlier in the month, the Junior Woman's Club presented a pleasing program on "What Shall I Read This Summer." Miss Martha McCain gave an enlightening resume of magazine contents and classified popular magazines. Miss Anne Pickett conducted a clever magazine contest. Miss Miriam Gordon, president of the Junior Club, presented the Senior Club a check for $5 as a goodwill token between the two organizations.

Club members passed on the legislative measures to be presented at the national meeting in Detroit. The club is going to send an original drawing of the clubhouse to national headquarters in Washington, D. C. This splendid likeness of the clubhouse was drawn by Miss Katherine Henry, member of the senior class of the Acworth High school.

Mrs. Dickerson Writes On 'Americanization.'

Mrs. M. D. Dickerson, of Douglas, chairman of Americanization, Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, in a message to clubwomen, says: "Georgia women have not done all they mean to do for Americanization. Programs and literature have been sent to individual clubs, and making better Americans is the keynote, by making the women born in foreign countries members of women's clubs. An Assyrian Club has been organized in Valdosta; this is being urged in all towns where there are any newly-made Americans. Douglas will have one by June 15.

"We have a foreign born population of 18,000; 5,000 of these are residents of Atlanta. Clubs have co-operated with state and city departments, doing Americanization work in the schools. Classes in cooking, sewing and homemaking are provided by the Smith-Hughes Fund. More than 100 have attended. Clubwomen have assisted in the preparation of naturalization papers, by filling them out and filing applications.

"A public ceremony is arranged to welcome new citizens and they have been presented with an American flag, and this year they will be given a copy of the constitution of the United States and a study of same will be held. During last year 89 persons were naturalized in Atlanta alone. Figures from other points have not been secured. There is no greater field for losing oneself in service for others than in helping the newly-made citizens to a reality of the privileges they have when they become bona fide Americans."

Jesup Woman's Club Plans Flower Show.

Jesup Woman's Club held its May meeting at the home of Mrs. W. B. Gibbs, with Mesdames Sallie Reville and T. G. Ritch assisting hostesses. Mrs. J. T. Colvin, the president, called the club to order and interest was shown in the plans made for the flower show to be held June 5.

Clubwomen hope that this exhibit will increase the interest in flowers and in the beautification of the city and will become an annual affair.

Mrs. A. G. Williams, chairman of the literary and education committee, had charge of the program and gave a most interesting and instructive talk on "Georgia, the Story Book Land."

Dance Recital.

Youthful dancers of Decatur will present a duo of recitals on June 3 and 4 at the Decatur Girls' High school auditorium. The dancers, pupils of Mrs. Mary Woodruff Darsey, will render a number of artistic dances. A "Gypsy Camp Dance," in which 30 children will participate will be featured.

"Sailors on Parade," another specialty number, with 35 dancers will be listed on the program. More than 100 children will take part. The public is invited, and there will be no admission charge.

Dallas Clubwomen Elect Officers.

Dallas clubwomen featured a Mother's day program in May and presented a song "Mother," by Hallie Hutchens, Mabel McGarity, Sara Foster, Mary Frances Cooper and Dot Hardage. Reading, "Dad's Schoolmate," by Wyatt Lee. The nominating committee gave a report and the following officers were unanimously elected:

President, Mrs. W. C. Sams; first vice president, Mrs. C. S. Foster; second vice president, Mrs. E. D. Wheeler; secretary, Miss Ora Lee Roberts; assistant secretary, Mrs. H. L. Croker; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Claud Rainwater; treasurer, Mrs. Price Kincaid; auditor, Miss Bessie Crew.

Deadwyler, presided. A motion was made and carried to recommend Woodie Reynolds as an applicant to Tallulah Falls school.

It was reported that $7.50 was given to the machine fund for the economics class at the school, also $5 on fund for seats in the auditorium. Mesdames Cecil Chandler and Morgan Pounds were welcomed as new members.

Mrs. Ray Miller was in charge of the following program: Reading and solo, little Mary Helen Hancock; musical reading, "That Old Sweetheart of Mine," Mesdames Roy David, Hubram Hancock, Misses Hallford, Cantrell and Mr. Sudath.

Gen. Lee's Portrait To Be Unveiled At Fort Benning on May 31

By Mrs. D. Marshall Holsenbeck, Assistant Editor of Georgia Division, U. D. C.

At the annual convention of the United Daughters of the Confederacy last November in New York city, on the recommendation of Mrs. William E. Massey, president-general of the society, a resolution was passed directing that oil portraits of General Robert E. Lee be presented to seven of the military schools of the nation located in several states. Georgia division, esteeming it a great privilege, assumed the financial responsibility for the portrait that is to be presented to Fort Benning, the largest infantry school in the world, named in honor of General Henry Lewis Benning, one of Georgia's most distinguished sons and a valiant Confederate military leader.

The presentation exercises will be held at Fort Benning at 10 o'clock on May 31 and an interesting program for that occasion has been arranged. It had been hoped that Mrs. Massey, the president-general, would be present, but an engagement in Virginia at that time makes it impossible for her to attend. Mrs. T. W. Reed, president of the Georgia division, will represent Mrs. Massey and will present the portrait in the name of the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

The presentation will be as follows: Invocation by chaplain, John F. Monahan; "Star Spangled Banner," 29th infantry band; introduction of president of the Georgia division, Mrs. M. J. Stone; presentation of portrait by Mrs. T. W. Reed, president of the Georgia division, U. D. C.; unveiling by Wesley C. Jones, youngest charter member of the Alice Tyler Gray Chapter, C. of C.; acceptance of the portrait by the commanding officer of the infantry school; music by the 29th infantry band; benediction, Chaplain Willis T. Howard. Members of the Daughters of the Confederacy expecting to attend the exercises at Fort Benning should notify Mrs. M. J. Stone, 715 Twenty-first street, Columbus, Ga., before May 30.

Members who will attend the unveiling of the portrait of General Robert E. Lee at Fort Benning, Ga., on May 31, are requested to be at Ralston hotel at 9 o'clock in order that their cars may be decorated. The cavalcade leaves promptly at 9:20 for Fort Benning. The committee in charge of the luncheon must know how many will be at the luncheon in order that reservations can be made by Wednesday. Write to Mrs. M. J. Stone, president of Lizzie Rutherford Chapter, immediately if you expect to attend.

Boynton Chapter, U. D. C., met at the Memorial clubhouse. Emily Head Strickland Chapter of the Children of the Confederacy presented the program, which had for its theme, "State Loyalty—Past, Present and Future." Under "past," Miss Cornelia Stuckey and Larry Goodrich told of the veterans who made history. Miss Madelyn Blackwelder discussed "present," telling of the ladies of the U. D. C., who are helping to preserve this history and mentioned the Memorial Association and the organization of the United Daughters of Confederacy. Under "future," Misses Miriam Luther and Eugene Hopkins told of the children to carry on.

Miss Virginia McLaurin, newest registered member, showed eight books which the chapter recently presented to the library. The chapter will present five copies of this picture to Griffin schools.

This meeting was called to order by Mrs. Ernest Travis, president, and Mrs. Robert Wheaton played the accompaniment. The opening prayer was led by Mrs. P. Y. Luther and Mrs. T. H. Wynne read the secretary's report. The following officers made their reports: Mrs. Albert Swint, treasurer; Mrs. H. H. Gossett, educational chairman; Mrs. H. T. Johnson, registrar; Mrs. W. E. H. Searcy Jr., club house corporation representative; Mrs. Mobley Johnson, representative on the Griffin board of relief; and Mrs. Robert Walker, publicity chairman. Mrs. Harry Johnson and Miss Julia Homer Wilson reported on the Memorial day parade and exercises. Mesdames A. S. Murray, E. P. Edwards, Reuben Jones and Charles Scales were social hour hostesses.

Miss Isabelle Allen, president of the Georgia division children of the Confederacy calls attention to the convention which will be held in Macon on June 12 and 13. Distinguished guests will be Mrs. N. M. Jordan, state director, C. of C., Mrs. T. W. Reed, state president, U. D. C.; Mrs. Frank Dennis, third vice president general; Mrs. W. D. Lamar, historian general; Mrs. H. M. Franklin, poet laureate and Mrs. J. J. Harris, past president, U. D. C., and others. Miss Allen states: "We are looking forward to a great convention. Lets have a good attendance and full reports. The outstanding work of this division this year is the erection of a memorial bench in Alexander H. Stephens Memorial Park at Crawfordville, Ga., which will be unveiled some time this year."

At the May meeting of the Larkin D. Watson chapter, U. D. C., Mrs. Frank Dennis, vice president of the Georgia division, also of the general division, U. D. C., was the interesting guest speaker. Her subject was Alexander H. Stephens and while paying loving tribute to his life of service and devotion to the Confederacy, she told of the preservation of his old homestead, Liberty Hall, and stressed to the chapter, at the request of the state president, Mrs. T. W. Reed, the importance of liberal donations for the preservation of Stratford, the home of General Robert E. Lee. Miss Vera Jones Edwards, who won first place in the music contest of the Georgia high schools, played selections. Mesdames J. T. Moore, Forrest Rossey and W. W. Jamerson were hostesses.

Georgia W. C. T. U. Is Thankful For Recent Prohibition Victory

By M. FRANCES MEADORS BURGHARD, of Macon, State W. C. T. U. Editor.

While the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is thankful for the partial victory achieved, the organization is not resting to rejoice, but is formulating plans for the complete outlawry of the trade in intoxicants, at the same time it will continue to teach what alcohol is and what it does, which constitute sufficient reasons for abstaining from its use, and for outlawing its manufacture and sale.

The W. C. T. U. will not quit until the liquor traffic quits. Its members joined with other prohibitionists in petitioning tht city council at Fort Valley and the authorities in Peach county, and the city council of Eastman, county commissioners of Dodge county not to permit the sale of beer, and others of the counties which voted against repeal, against beer, against wine are to take similar action—and that is not all—but other plans will be made known at the proper time. In fact, the drys of this state have just begun to fight!

"Of course we are disappointed over the results of the election as we did not win the glorious victory we so confidently expected," said Dr. Mary Harris Armor, who led the prohibitionists to victory in 1907, and who has resultantly campaigned in prohibition states all over the nation. "But our faith is not shaken and we are going on with our great campaign of organization and education, knowing that beverage alcohol is surely doomed."

Mrs. Mary Scott Russell, of Atlanta, State W. C. T. U. president, said on Tuesday: "At last the returns from the recent election have been certified by the secretary of state, with the 'drys' leading against repeal by 234 votes. The beer and wine bills carried by the 'wets,' cuts into the rejoicing over the repeal victory. But even so, there may be found some comfort, for already several counties are petitioning the city councils and county commissioners not to permit the sale of beer, and others are planning to do so. Then some counties and towns are considering the plan of placing a prohibitive license on beer. The W. C. T. U. will continue to teach what alcohol is, what it does and why it should be outlawed and the law against it obeyed."

Macon W. C. T. U., of which Mrs. D. A. Warlick was president eight years, was joined by the members of her missionary society and Sunday school class in a memorial service to her on Friday. Mrs. H. W. Gibson, the vice president of the W. C. T. U., who presided, stated that the gathering was designed to allow expressions of thankfulness and joy that such a woman as Mrs. Warlick lived and labored with them and led on to better things.

Mrs. C. N. Hudson read the chapter in Proverbs which describes the attributes and acts of a good woman, making application to Mrs. Warlick. Miss Loula Glass paid a tribute to Mrs. Warlick's helpfulness as president of a large Bible class for a term of years. Mrs. W. N. Ainsworth recounted Mrs. Warlick's steady, regular interested attendance upon the missionary society and its circle, and her help with not only its local social service, but in the salvation of the unsaved across the seas.

Mrs. August Burghard, whose tribute Mrs. Warlick was as a W. C. T. U. executive, She recounted her consistent, persistent, consecrated efforts for the protection of the home, for the abolition of the liquor traffic, and for the triumph of Christ's Golden Rule in custom and in law. She said Mrs. Warlick's first W. C. T. U. office was leader of a loyal temperance and the children's temperance organization; that she had served as treasurer, as sixth district president seven years, and as president of the Macon W. C. T. U. eight years, that several hundreds of members had been gained and extensive departmental activities had been made during her regime; that her chief characteristics as an officer was her ability to harmonize the varying elements and to inspire definite accomplishments from many individuals. She urged those honoring Mrs. Warlick's memory to promote temperance through total abstinence and prohibition by hearty co-operation in the W. C. T. U. Eulogists stressed Mrs. Warlick's faithfulness, loyalty to the cause and her church and her friends, her consecrtation to God and her loving kindness to humanity.

This was expressed in the resolutions prepared by Mesdames Frank Taylor, Andrew Voight and Harry H. Hudson and read by the latter. Miss Julia Goodall sang, "Nothing Between Me and My Saviour," accompanied by Mrs. Florine Burdick Davis. Mrs. G. P. Gostin, the oldest member, an and long-time friend of Mrs. Warlick led in prayer. Rev. Albert Outler pronounced the benediction. A basket of white roses, the handle tied with a white ribbon bow, the emblem of the W. C. T. U., which stood on the speaker's table was placed on Mrs. Warlick's grave, as another indication of the love and appreciation of her W. C. T. U. comrades.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN ACTION. By Michael Williams. 358 pp. New York: The Macmillan Company. $2.50.

The author of "The Book of High Romance," "Little Brother Francis of Assisi" and many other books has written another interesting work: "The Catholic Church in Action." This book was made possible with the collaboration of Julia Kernan.

One cannot easily forget the experiences of Michael Williams—no longer the unhappy "Quietist" of the past—as he related then in his spiritual autobiography, "The Book of High Romance," and especially the chapters dealing with the hardships that were his in those initial days of his journalistic career.

Mr. Williams, who received his education at Saint Joseph's College, New Brunswick, is at present the editor of The Commonweal, a weekly review of literature, the arts and public affairs. He was formerly city editor of the San Francisco Examiner and special correspondent in Mexico for the International News Service.

This new book of Mr. Williams, bearing the imprimatur of his eminence Patrick Cardinal Hayes, archbishop of New York, must have been an extremely difficult task. It has been said that the bibliography published with this work gives the reader only a faint conception of the enormous amount of hard labor which had first to be spent upon the assembling of data.

Written with clarity, this book has been prepared to meet the need "for an accurate and popular description of the administrative details by which the Catholic church keeps its various activities all over the world running smoothly. It is a work of exposition, strictly non-controversial both in purpose and in treatment, content simply to present the principal facts."

It has been explained that situations constantly arise in which numbers of people, both Catholic and non-Catholic, have use for information concerning the practical operations of the Catholic church. And that still greater numbers would like to obtain even a rudimentary but accurate knowledge of how this great organization functions. Neither group has known where to turn to have its wants supplied.

Michael Williams describes briefly, clearly and frankly the main outlines of the organized system by means of which the Catholic church carries on its work in the world today. "Only the most elementary summary of this tremendous subject," he says in his introduction, "is possible within the limits of a single volume, not meant for ecclesiastical students, but for the average reader, whether Catholic or non-Catholic, who would like to know in a general way how the church is constructed and how its various parts are put together to function within the frame-work of the institution as a whole."

Believing that most competent observers would agree that since the close of the World War the Catholic church has been positively active, and that all things save the Catholic church are in a condition of flux, Mr. Williams asserts that today mankind is harried by world-wide revolutions, wars and threats of future wars; plagued by economic disaster on a gigantic scale; while millions upon millions of men, women and children are suffering from bitter want in the midst of plenty.

Fascism, national socialism and communism have struck harder blows at the social forms built in the nineteenth century than the war and peace treaties combined, he believes. But the members of the Catholic church, he adds, hold strongly to the belief that the Catholic church alone remains unaffected by the disintegrating forces which are at work everywhere else—preparing the way for a new epoch, whatever it may be.

The book fittingly begins with an informative account of Peter's city—Rome, the center of Christendom. This is followed by a chapter on the Vatican, and Mr. Williams gives, in the light of his studies, both at Rome and in other parts of the world, his account of the papacy, (of which he says "every part and all functions of the Catholic church depend upon the powers of the Pope"); the Pope at work, cardinals, Roman congregations, tribunals, offices, papal commissions and the church's diplomatic service.

Part Two deals with the hierarchy, parish, priest, missions, eastern churches, orders, education, the liturgy. The last chapter, "Catholic Lay Action," brings the book to a fitting close by stating that every great doctrine of the faith, and each and every detail of its immense organization, which is outlined in this work, is given its meaning and receives its value in that outpouring of the spiritual life of Christ which is Catholic action.

No Call for Tears.

Robert Ullin, achieving authorship with "Besides, the Wench Is Dead," has not made a particularly auspicious start. He avoids dullness by keeping his characters in a continual stew of activity.

The setting is in Pittsburgh of a decade ago when money was a commodity of which everyone was supposed to have plenty, and, for the most part, care little about. A three-story red brick boarding house on one of the back streets of the city is the principal scene. Technically, "boarding house" describes the place adequately, but actually it is an euphemism.

The book is self-consciously naughty, with little excuse for the naughtiness unless one accepts the theory that the greater the number of sexual affairs included, the greater the sale of the book.

All manner of characters are included. There is a man who loves his invalid wife, but has kept the same mistress for about 15 years; wealthy Pittsburgh and New York socialites named Van Anden, Kirkpatrick and Milvaine; a rich owner of a steel mill, who has worked his way to the top and who uses the diction of a Brooklyn wharf-rat at the beginning of the book, but who later develops into a polished and kindly gentleman; a linguist with a Russian name who has a trunk full of medals and who always wears a blue denim shirt; and a girl who comes to the boarding house from a convent and is eager to learn about life, and does. Jailbirds, neurotic and perverted persons, sweet, innocent girls and, of course, the usual number of strong and silent men to rescue others from their follies are among the remaining characters. A series of sordid complications gives some of the characters a chance to prove their strength and others to confirm their weakness.

At the end, the conventional deaths, suicides and departures for places unknown dispose of those who have become too involved to be successfully extricated. The others, rescued by the strong, silent men, marry and, presumably, live happily ever afterward.

Readin' 'n' 'Ritin'

At hand is evidence of a reaction to the inquiry by Louis Parsons, of New York's Roosevelt hotel, concerning the use of the word "tote."

From L. G. W., Atlanta, comes the following comment:

"In your column of the 19th you invite the opinion of your readers on from where the word 'tote' comes.

"I do not know, but I can tell you that as a child before the war in the country in South Carolina, I used to hear it in frequent use. 'Fetch' meant to bring, and 'tote' meant to carry.

"A number of words of African origin were current in those days, and I always assumed that 'tote' was an African word. It is, of course, possible it may be old English."

The comment on "tote" in the Literary Digest, which Mr. Parsons promised this column, is signed by Whit Gaydon, of Hammonton, Cal., and reads:

Please permit me to use your columns to express my disapproval of the general misuse of the good word tote. This word is said by some to have been "coined" by the southern negroes. Others claim that it was first used by the white country people of the south. Frankly I don't know. A southern white countryman myself, I have been using it all my life. And I found it in general use among both races from my earliest days.

It is a highly useful word, as it is easily spoken and expressive of something no other word can quite accomplish. The dictionary defines it as "to carry," but this definition is too short, according to the way it is used in its native habitat. The definition should be "to carry on the person." The dictionary gives that definition to the word bear. But bear is seldom used in this way, as it has other meanings. Tote, however, has only the one meaning: To carry on the person.

Mr. Gaydon's belief that "tote" has only one meaning—to carry on the person—is not in line with recollections of this column.

For instance, if two negroes were taking turns at carrying a heavy bucket, and one suspected he was doing more than his share, he would say to his comrade, "Looky here, hit's yo' time to tote dis bucket."

If Mr. Gaydon means that "tote" applies only to such things as can be carried on the person—a razor or a pistol, for instance—it would seem the meaning is too restricted.

Quite common in boyhood days was the expression, "I'll make him tote the mail." This was used by both white and black boys. It meant that they threw rocks at or in some other manner caused the object of their temporary wrath to flee at top speed.

As for the word "carry," it was often used in place of "escort." But let's stick to "tote;" have you any information concerning its genesis?

A number of volumes of excellent poetry by young women were submitted to the poetry jury of the advisory board of the Columbia University School of Journalism. A young woman was the winner, a fact which recalls the poems of Catherine Poyas Ravenel Walker, who died in October, 1934.

Miss Walker's poems, which were privately printed by her friends in Rion, S. C., reveal flashes of high talents. In many of them there was a touch of irony, and always her sympathy was large in its expression, and her understanding of the burdens which mere living involves was apt.

"Approach to Divinity," is the expression of a sensitive soul:

I have wondered at life's weariness,
Scoffedat its loneliness,
Known its tumult and tranquillity,
Its clamor and its content.
I have loved its silences,
And dreaded its compulsion.
Much have I learned from living,
Yet there is always more.
I have wondered at its wisdom
And pondered its wastefulness.

When half around the world we were,
Love bridged the miles and triumphed over space—
Then we were close. But now
It's sad to think how many worlds apart we are—
When we stand face to face.

In her "O Charity! What Crimes," the irony cuts deep and true.

Candor and Sympathy.

SO BRIEF THE YEARS. By Natalie Sokoloff. 475 pp. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co., Inc. $2.50.

Books on Russia have poured into the literary market during the past few years with the force and volume of a torrent. Some have essayed to describe the political and economic scene, others the lives and miraculous escapes of bluebloods whose relatives were slain indiscriminately by the reds. The Russian theme had become a little tiresome when we opened "So Brief the Years." Then our interest revived and grew as we read, for although the same revolution-torn Russia is used as a background, Miss Sokoloff has conceived her story somewhat differently from the rest, and she writes with such candor and sympathy and movement that it is difficult to put the book down until the last page has been finished. It is neither a biography nor a socio-political diatribe, but a novel written for its story-appeal alone. Russian "conditions" are treated only in so far as they effect the characters of the story, and the only actual biographical incidents are those of Lenin and Stalin whom the author happened to meet in Moscow and whom she portrays somewhat superficially.

Elements of Russian social life and habits are woven skillfully into the pattern of the story, which deals with the life of the beautiful and voluptuous Zinaida. When she passed men in the streets, on trolleys or in bread queues, "in their imagination she was fondled and possessed by them all." At first unaware of her power over men, she held fast to her virtue until her ill and aristocratic mother began to starve and freeze in a dirty Moscow tenement. Then Zinaida capitulates to the come-hither stares of Ismailov, a powerful official of the red army, and goes to live with him in a prince's palace in which he has established himself. Zinaida escapes from the hated Ismailov and becomes in turn the mistress of a spy, who takes her to a white stronghold in the south; of a white general, who is killed by the invading red army; of a bolshevik captain, who takes her to live in a secluded inland village; and of a prince of royal blood, with whom she flees to Poland after months of hardships. The story takes a final, surprising turn on the last page while Zinaida is aboard a train headed for France and America with Andrey.

"So Brief the Years" presents a sympathetic picture of Russian life during the period of civil war without the bias that characterizes so many of the recent Russian volumes. An underlying compassion for her countrymen is present in every page of Miss Sokoloff's book. She writes with discernment of their hardships in both the cities and rural districts. They lived in cramped quarters with little food and sparse clothing, with the menace of famine ever present and the fear of the secret police lying deep in their hearts. Miss Sokoloff herself is of noble birth, but she writes with equal understanding of her own class and of the proletariat. Her first novel bears ample testimony of her ability as a story-teller. One looks forward to other books arising out of her kaleidoscopic existence in the capitals of Russia, England and the United States.

Matthan, Jacob, Joseph

JOSEPH. The Husband of Mary. By Hiram Graham. 482 pp. New York: The Yorktown Press. $2.50.

This novel offers an opportunity to live again in the Mediterranean world during a period that produced great issues and great names. Starting with the memorable year of 63 B. C., we are led to expect an excursion around the Mediterranean of the Greco-Roman, the Hebrew and the Egyptian, since the author very carefully dates the beginning of his novel in terms of the calendars of these cultures. History and fiction are skillfully woven together, with the result that both historical and imaginary characters have the semblance of reality.

Triumvirates flourished during this period in the Roman world, but in the mind of the author the "triumvirate" which emerges from the shadowy realm of traditional Christianity deserves treatment. The paternal ancestry of Jesus furnishes the names of the heroes of this novel. From the long genealogy which introduces the gospel of Matthew, the author chooses the last three names around which to build his story. These shadowy figures begin to take form and become as real as Pompey or Caesar or any other character whose name made news in the latter part of the century before Christ.

The lives of these ancestors of Jesus are interwoven with the total life of the great world that centered about the Mediterranean, and we find ourselves experiencing something of the thrilling life that was found in the various areas of this world as "Mattan, Jacob and Joseph" in turn become a part of its life.

The atmosphere of antiquity is suggested by Mr. Graham's excellent use of English of the King James version of the Bible. He has saturated his novel with this type of diction and has done it well. He has no sermons in his novel, he develops no new theology nor does he repudiate any theology, but attempts to reveal a world into which came a carpenter of Nazareth to challenge some of its assumptions. But the carpenter of Nazareth does not enter the picture, except in a casual manner, for this is a story of Joseph and of his father, Jacob, and of his father, Matthan.

The Story of Pierre, the Ugly

And here is the story of Pierre, which is all the more fascinating because it is the true story of a man everyone learned to love.

Years ago, far too long for you to remember, a little boy baby was born to an old peasant man and his wife living in southern France. At first this little baby was just like other children its age, but as the months rolled by it became ugly—not in nature, to be sure, for little Pierre was as sweet and loving as ever a baby could be—but his face became terribly ugly.

As he grew older, people would avoid him, because of his ugly face. He had no playmates, and even the farmers and merchants in the village refused to let him work for them; "You would frighten our customers away," they would say to him. But in spite of their cruel treatment, Pierre remained the same sweet-tempered, kind natured boy he always had been. Quite unknown to anyone he did many kindnesses, even for the people who were so cruel to him.

Pierre grew to manhood—still shunned by his neighbors and without a single friend in the world except his faithful dog, "Beau-Beau."

"If only I were not so ugly," thought Pierre, "or if I could only go to Paris—maybe someone there would give me work and might not be so miserable."

Begins Walk to Paris.

So one fine day he started out to walk to Paris—for he had no horse and no one would give him a ride. He trudged on for many days, sleeping at night in the fence corners along the road, until at last he could see the tall church spires of Paris, far in the distance. One afternoon as he walked along the road with "Beau-Beau," he heard strains of music and for some unaccountable reason, he knew not why, instead of going out of his way to avoid the place from which it came, he seemed drawn by some unseen force to investigate its source. In a few moments, around a bend in the road, he came upon a carnival, where the simple peasant folk were dancing and where clowns and trained animals were amusing a crowd of children with their tricks and stunts.

Pierre watched with a wonder in his eyes—he had never seen a clown nor a carnival in all his life, and he couldn't understand why the children laughed and clapped their little hands with glee when some grotesque clown danced, or turned somersaults.

"They are quite as ugly as I," thought Pierre, "still the children are not afraid of them. I wonder—"

What marvelous transition took place in the mind of Pierre as he watched the carnival does not matter.

Fights in Great War.

The years rolled on. The Great War came and Pierre fought side by side with the other brave men of France against the invading hordes of the enemy. And for a time Pierre forgot the past, and all his ugliness—for nothing mattered then but bravery—and Pierre was brave as well as kind and loving.

Then came peace and the soldiers went back to their farms and villages but Pierre had nowhere to go.

He sat one day in the shadow of the great Arc de Triomphe which stands in a great public square in the heart of Paris—thinking of the past. And as he sat there wondering what would become of him he remembered the carnival and the clowns, which amused the children and made them happy and gay.

Why couldn't he make children happy, too? He would try, anyway. So he whitened his face with chalk like he had seen the clowns' faces whitened and hunted out the great Paris hospital where hundreds of little crippled children were being taken care of and treated by the French government.

Amuses Children.

He asked if he might be allowed to amuse the children with stories and stunts. "I am sure they will not be afraid of me," he pleaded, even though down in his heart he was afraid they would be.

The superintendent hesitated but when he learned from Pierre that he had been a soldier and had been decorated for bravery in the trenches, he finally said, "Yes."

Regularly each morning he visited the hospital and before long the superintendent and doctors began to notice a marked improvement in their little charges. Their lean wan faces brightened into smiles and laughter whenever Pierre appeared.

The children grew stronger in body and more hopeful in spirit as the weeks went by and Pierre grew happy, too. For not only had he made friends of the children, but the doctors and the nurses and even the visitors to the great hospital shook his hand and thanked him.

GIRL SCOUT NEWS

The week of June 10, Monday through Friday, is the week for organized troop camping at Civitania. That means that any troop that reserves the place can go and stay all day and overnight and will have the same kind of program that they would have for one day during the general camp.

The troops will arrive before noon and get settled in time for lunch at 12:30. After lunch, each troop will meet with the leaders to decide what part of the activities they wish to participate in.

Swimming for everyone will be at 3 o'clock with Miss Bee Turner in charge. Then either crafts or nature or map making from 4 until 6 o'clock.

Supper at 6 o'clock, quiet games and songs until camp fire at 7:30. The camp fire will be planned and directed by Misses Marie Parker and Dot Argue. Taps at 9 o'clock.

The rising bell will ring at 6:45 the next morning and colors will be at 7:30; then breakfast, making blanket rolls, Scout activity and swimming just before the troop leaves for home at 11:30.

Each leader knows the cost and requirements for the troop camp and there are places for three more troops to register either Tuesday, Thursday or Friday.

The typical day of camp life will give all Girl Scouts who attend a good impression of what a day in camp is like, besides having the fun of being with their own troops.

Camp Contest Ends

Floods of letters telling "Why I Want and Need a Week at Camp" have literally swamped the desk of the Young America Club secretary at The Constitution. The contest officially closed last night at midnight, and the judges have begun their task of determining the boy and girl winners who will each receive a week at camp in the mountains of northeast Georgia.

The many fine letters received indicate that summer camps are quite popular. The lucky girl whose letter is adjudged the best will have a delightful time as guest of Camp Chatooga for Girls, and the lucky boy will spend a happy, healthy week at the Athens "Y" Camp for Boys. Both camps are in the Blue Ridge mountains about three miles from Tallulah, Ga. Watch next Sunday's Young America page for announcement of the winners!

CAMP FIRE GIRLS

With vacation so near at hand, Camp Fire Girls are making exciting plans for the summer, both at camp and at home. With Camp Toccoa opening in less than a month, groups are busy making ties, putting name tapes in their camp clothes, and collecting the many things that go in the bag to take to camp. Most Camp Fire Girls go to camp for at least a week, but they are in town for several weeks during the summer and an interesting city-summer program has been planned for them. This will be the sixth year that local Camp Fire Girls have enjoyed their day camp at Avondale, and this year district day camps will be added so that all girls, whether members of local groups or not, will have the advantages of outdoor life.

Vacation time is a period of relaxation, freedom from enforced schedules, a time to play and to learn to do the things one is most interested in. Go on hikes, make books, listing all the places for hikes; make maps of hikes taken or make individual or group count books or hikes; become out-of-door enthusiasts. You can cook in your own back yard as well as in the woods, if you can't get away from home. You may get recipes from Camp Fire headquarters for outdoor cooking, if you wish. How about preparing a meal for the dads without using cooking utensils, or surprising the mothers with a scrumptious meal prepared by their own daughters?

Summer time is hobby time. Much is said in favor of having a hobby, and vacation time is the time to start one, whether it be horseback riding, starting a nature notebook, giving dramatics, or having a garden. Summer is the best time to study the stars and almost every girl is interested in knowing about the constellations. Vacations should have a differentness—they should hold adventure—let Camp Fire give this to you.

Worth Knowing

Julius Caesar, most famed of all the Roman emperors, has been historically linked with the month of March. On the fifteenth day of this blustery month, although previously warned by a soothsayer to beware of the Ides of March, Caesar was killed by the dagger of Brutus, and Mars was thus avenged for Caesar's having rearranged the Roman calendar so as to dethrone March from its place as the first month of the year.

Famous Artist Designs Official Poster for Boy Scout Jamboree

Norman Rockwell, famous artist, has designed an official poster for the Boy Scout jamboree, August 21-30, when 30,000 Boy Scouts will encamp in Washington, D. C., in the greatest gathering of boyhood which has ever taken place in America.

Rockwell has caught the thrill of this great national event with the clarion call "On to Washington" addressed to the one million scouts and scout leaders of America. It is not surprising that he should have approached the subject sympathetically, for Rockwell, earning today a king's ransom by his brush, began his artistic career as a "cub" artist more than 20 years ago on Boys' Life, the magazine for all boys, published by the Boy Scouts of America.

Only 25 more scouts will fill the quota allowed the Atlanta Council, Boy Scouts of America, for the jamboree. The places will be open until June 1, after which date the Atlanta council cannot guarantee a place. Full information about the jamboree may be obtained at the Atlanta council headquarters.

Checking Up on the Birds

It would be very interesting to watch the birds as they make their appearance here and identify them by their color and size and song. The best way to begin of course, is to get hold of a good bird book that will give you the time schedules of the birds so that you will know which ones to expect in April and which ones in May.

After you have become familiar with the habits and descriptions of the birds you might expect to see, you will have the best luck if you are up before 7 o'clock in the morning, for seeing the birds. Get some friend to go with you who is also interested. Wear old brown and gray clothing; dress warmly. Learn to walk quietly. Keep your mouth shut and your eyes and ears open. It would be well for this is the time most favorable to take along an opera glass, if you have one, and a notebook. Compare what you find with a good bird book such as the one by Frank G. Ashbrook of the United States Department of Agriculture, published by the Whitman Publishing Company.

When you see a new bird look first for his color. The diagram shows the principal parts of a bird and will help you locate those colors from its description in your bird book and thus be able to classify him and name him. The most important colors to look for are those about the head and breast and the wings, especially the wings which often are very definitely marked by bars of color called wing bars.

Next look at his size and compare him with the three most familiar birds that you know, the sparrow, the robin and the crow. Is he larger or smaller than the English sparrow? Is he as large as a robin? How does he compare with a crow? If, by this time, you have not been able to name him, notice where he is and what he is doing. These things will often give you cues that will enable you to identify him.

Now let me tell you about a fascinating bird that in some years is common to this section of the country and in some years in very rare. The evening grosbeak is a fascinating yellow-brown fellow with white secondaries and a yellow crown. He is known as an irregular migrator and might almost be called a wanderer. He spends his winters in the south so that before many days now he will be heading north to the big woods of Canada. He wanders around so much that he can hardly call any location home.

The cardinal that everyone knows is hardly a traveler at all. I have seen cardinals here all winter hovering in small flocks together in sheltered places. Like a harbinger of spring, even during the snowing days of February, the cardinal will venture forth with his song of good cheer predicting warmer weather ahead.

The scarlet tanagers are an interesting pair. The male bird is a brilliant red with solid black wings and black-tipped tail, while the female is an olive green with a lighter yellow-green breast and black wings.

Book Nook

Bird Neighbors. By Neltje Blanchan. Garden City Publishing Co., Garden City, N. Y. $1.

You might call this book a sort of introduction to more than 150 birds, which are commonly found in the gardens, meadows and woods about us. It was written because the author felt it was too bad for boys and girls and grown-ups, too, not to have so much as a bowing acquaintance with the birds that nest in our gardens or under the very eaves of our houses; that haunt our wood-piles; that keep our fruit trees free from those despisable little worms known as "slugs;" that waken us with their sweet songs; and enliven our walks along the roadside and through the woods. Surely we may think of birds as being our most kindly disposed neighbors.

The birds in "Bird Neighbors" are classified according to their color. Then there are classifications according to families, habitat, seasons in which they may be expected, and size. In this way we learn how to identify them. Only the ones that are most worth knowing are shown in this delightful book. Surely we will all want to read and find out about the little songsters, trillers and fighters that add so much pleasure, cheer and amusement to our lives.

Young Americans To Visit Atlanta

Forty Young Americans from the sixth grade of Cornelia, Ga., will spend next Tuesday in Atlanta on a sight-seeing tour of the city, arranged by their teacher, Mrs. James A. Ashe.

They will arrive in Atlanta about 9 o'clock Tuesday morning and will go to the state capitol where they will spend about an hour and a half. They will then visit the governor's mansion and other points of interest in the city.

At 11 o'clock they will be entertained at a theater party at Loew's Grand by Eddie Melniker, manager, where they will see the mystery thriller "Mark of the Vampire," starring Lionel Barrymore.

After the theater party, they will spend a picnic lunch at Grant Park, and then see the cyclorama and the animals. They will drive by Stone mountain before going back to Cornelia late Tuesday afternoon.

Tips for the Stamp Collector

This week we have a stamp from Egypt. Even if you are not a stamp collector, you will learn something of importance by a study of this stamp.

The illustration is a likeness of the Sphinx. The Sphinx is a mythological monster of many descriptions, but usually with the head of a woman, the body of a lion, wings of a bird and the tail of a serpent. It was carved from solid rock and the duties of this monster were to guard the portals of the rising sun.

Now we have a brief knowledge of the picture on this stamp, but this is only the beginning. On observing the stamp more closely we find in the left-hand corner, either the top or bottom, a figure 5, while on the other side there appears a strange figure that means, in Egyptian, five also. If you will notice the sides of the stamp you may observe the word "five milliems" in English and Egyptian.

If the average person had taken the trouble to learn what has been told in the above article, they would no doubt call this the end of our story, but to a stamp collector the above information is just the beginning of it.

If the collector has a Standard Postage Stamp Catalog he has before him one of the most valuable stamp books ever printed. This book contains the dates of the issue of every stamp that has ever been issued. This information also includes the color, size, shape and value of the stamp, and most of the pictures of the stamps thereby making it easy to find any stamp you are looking for. If you own the stamp pictured above we will turn in our catalog to Egypt. Upon finding the picture of this stamp in the book we discover that it is listed as No. A28 and was issued in 1914, with a later issue in 1921 to 1922. The quickest way to find the value of a stamp is to look for its color. In this case the color is the same on both stamps, but one issue is watermarked with a "Triple Crescent and Star."

If we put our stamp in benzine and lay it on something dark we will discover the aforementioned watermark. The issue carrying this watermark on the stamp is worth 50 cents unused, and 2 cents used. If you have a stamp like the one above, only without the mark, we are able to refer to the issue of 1914 and discover that it is worth only 25 cents unused and 2 cents used.

The Parents' Forum

Dear Miss Montague: I am writing this letter in the hope that my experience may prove helpful to some other mother who may have a similar problem.

In our home there are three boys and I had always found it rather difficult to make the oldest boy realize that sometimes it becomes his duty and privilege to help mother with home duties. Finally I hit upon the iden of introducing some play into the task-at-hand and the results have been splendid.

Sometimes when he is wiping the dishes for me, we pretend that we are visiting the zoo, and the dishes and silverware are all sorts and kinds of animals. One Saturday morning when he was helping me, he picked up something and named it a black lynx. Then he asked me if I knew the story of how the lynx got his funny stubby tail. I said "no." He proceeded to relate the details of the little story, and lo and behold when he had finished, the dishes were all done, and we had both enjoyed ourselves!

The second boy who is 8 years old, likes to help me wash the dishes quite frequently and he pretends they are school children going to school, and we name the grades and classes they are attending.

I find my littlest boy quite helpful, willing to do things without being asked, and many times offering to help.

I have it a rule that Saturday mornings my boys must stay home and help me a little, and play around home, too. In the afternoon they can perhaps go to a friend's for a little while, or go fishing or for a walk or some other little excursion; it varies according to the time of year.

My husband and I are members of the local P.-T. A. We have always tried to co-operate with the school by keeping in touch with teachers to know if we can help in any way. Sometimes we can.

With kindest regards for the Young America Club, and for the Parents' Forum, in particular. Cordially yours, (MRS.) R. N.

Dear Editor: I enjoy the Parents' Column and find the letters from mothers and their suggestions very helpful.

In dealing with the manifold problems which confront a mother of four, I have discovered that there are many useful devices which make for play, and serve to restore peace after a stormy scene.

When assigning little duties to my 8-year-old I have found that a list which is made out in detail and given to him for checking, is quite effective in getting all the tasks done willingly. When the table is to be cleared away after a meal, for instance, we will say: (1) Gather silver, (2) scrape plates, (3) stack and carry carefully to kitchen, etc. When he has finished his work, he gives the list to me.

Then when the "littlest one" comes rushing into the house crying loudly, after a quarrel with a small playmate, I quickly find two paper sacks for cookies, raisins or apples and give them to her saying, "Do you want to take one for Emily and one for yourself?" Her tears vanish and she is out of the house at once, shouting joyously, "Emily, look here! Mother has a party for us!"

This same child went to the birthday party of a little friend not long ago and all the time that the children were playing games, she kept saying to me, "But mother, when is the party going to be?" It was only after the ice cream and cake had appeared that she felt she had really come to a party.

My twin boys take great delight in playing outside in the rain. When they were barely 2 years old I got them nice thick, high-top boots and let them splash to their heart's content. How they do like to wade in mud puddles! Of course, I take care to remove these muddy boots on the back porch, thereby avoiding tracks on the rugs.

I should be glad to hear from other mothers who have ideas to share along these lines.

MRS. A. S. D.

NATURE PRESENTS—

Black Swallowtail Butterfly

WHERE FOUND

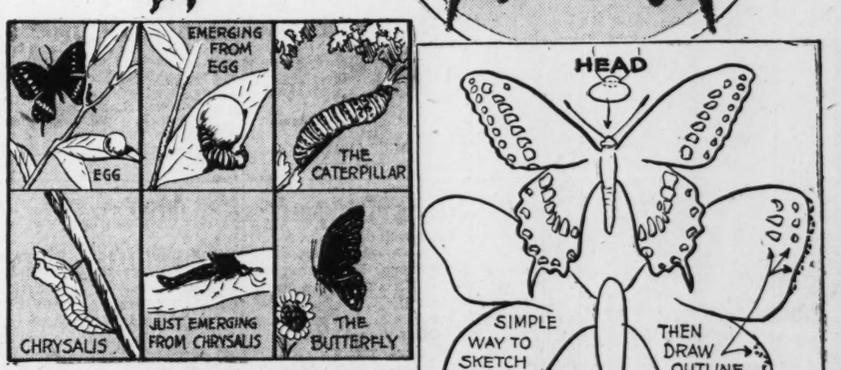

Throughout the United States and southern Canada.

PHYSICAL FEATURES

In adult stage, male is about three inches long, female is slightly larger. Tail-like extension of hind wings.

COLOR

Male brighter, black wings, two main rows of yellow spots and smaller daubs near wing margins. Female has more blue on hind wings. On lower surface of wings color is mostly orange.

Female lays white egg upon leaf. Almost two weeks pass before a black larval worm crawls out. It sheds its skin three times, after which it appears as a full grown green caterpillar, spotted black and yellow. After ten days it enters the chrysalis stage, months long, until it casts off the old drab skin and soon darts away a butterfly.

TODAY'S DRAWING LESSON

The most romantic of insects is the butterfly and the black swallowtail with its 26 species is among the best known and admired. No other creature has such a fascinating life cycle, so many startling transformations, so great a change from ugliness to beauty. Like most natural life, the male is usually more handsome and decorative than the female. In the case of the swallowtail, she is large and has more blue on her wings. Anise leaves are the favorite resting place of her eggs, and furnish the larva food until it is able as a caterpillar to move around. Most interesting is the transition from the caterpillar to the chrysalis. The worm spins itself a loop around the twig. Its back skin splits and the chrysalis wriggles out a shapeless mass. The unpleasant car-away odor which the green caterpillar gives off upon being touched is its defense against birds.

MUSICIANS AT BASS APPEAR IN CONCERT

The Bass orchestra, Mandolin Club and bugle corps were presented in a concert on Wednesday, May 22. A. J. Garing, director of the orchestra, and Miss Frank Taylor, who sponsors the Mandolin Club, deserve much credit for the excellent training the students have received under their instruction, and the bugle corps plainly shows the good management of W. O. Moody, athletic director.

Two campships are being offered this year for the two ninth grade students at Bass who possess the greatest number of honor points. Points are obtained by belonging to various character building organizations, and participation in school activities. The campships are being awarded by Camp Dixie for Boys and Camp Dixie for Girls, Camp Chattooga and the Athens "Y" camp.

Plans for the Bass Play Day that is to be held at Piedmont park on June 4 are rapidly developing. A number of new events are scheduled, among them an exciting bicycle race. The students are very enthusiastic about this annual event.

Superintendent's Message

My dear Boys and Girls:

The lists for summer activities have been sent to you. There are activities for home, for church, for school and for the community. There are activities for your own improvement and for the development for your life. We have tried to think in terms of many boys and girls and to provide different things that would suit each of you. There may be some activities in which you would like to engage that are not listed here. If you will do them and do them well and will submit a report upon them we shall be glad to give you credit for all you do.

I am anxious for you to do something during these three summer months that will help you to be strong physically, to grow, to develop into the type of girl or boy, and man or woman that your home and your country desires.

In the second place, I am anxious for you to do something that will improve your mind, help you to understand more difficult things and teach you to think. Above all, I am anxious that you will do those things that will make your soul stronger and bigger and better, and give you an opportunity to serve your fellows.

When you select your summer activities think of three things: Things that will help you to grow, other things that will enlarge your mental vision and horizon, and things that will give you a greater soul.

Always your friend,
WILLIS A. SUTTON,

At the annual French assembly Friday, May 17, Girls' High French department culminated its activities for 1934-35. At the end of the elaborate program consisting of readings, songs and skits in French, M. Charles Loridans, president of the Alliance Francaise, awarded the French medal to Kathleen Eidson, the senior who for three years has made the highest record in her study of French.

The decoration of the Palmes Academiques was bestowed upon Miss Martha L. Slaton, head of the French department, who received the honor from the French government in recognition of her outstanding and successful teaching of the language.

Girls' High Times, in Athens at the Georgia Scholastic Press Association convention, May 3, won, as reward for its journalistic endeavor, a silver loving cup and the title of the best high school paper published in Georgia cities with populations over 25,000. Josephine McWhirter, of G. H. S., was elected president of G. S. P. A. for next year.

Other achievements of High Times are its receiving all-American honor rating for the fourth time in the last four years; and its ranking second in its class, in the Atlanta Journal-Emory University contest, conducted to determine the most outstanding papers of the accredited high schools in the southeastern states.

NEWS of STAGE and SCREEN

EDITED by RALPH T. JONES

'Unwelcome Stranger' at Rialto Is Clever Story of Race Track

"Unwelcome Stranger" is the feature attraction now current at the Rialto theater. It is a Columbia production directed by Phil Rosen and almost, if not quite, equals in fascination its predecessor in race track films, "Broadway Bill."

There are some race track scenes that are as thrilling as any made and the big race that brings the punchful climax is as cleverly done as anything the films have given us yet.

Ingredients of the story include a superstitious horse owner, his crooked jockey and betting commissioner, his kind and lovely wife, the honest old trainer, a waif from an orphan asylum and a beautiful two-year-old horse.

When you understand the owner has a pet superstition that orphans bring bad luck and when he attributes the losses, really brought about by the double crossing of his jockey and betting man, to the presence of the little lame orphan boy and the orphaned young horse in his stable, you can realize the potent possibilities for drama and suspense in the picture.

It is the kind of film that women love for its human sympathy and that men flock to see for its powerful sports scenes. If you can't get a real kick out of that big, final race with the little lame boy as jockey, you can't be thrilled by anything.

In addition to the unusually fine feature Manager W. T. Murray has a group of exceptionally entertaining short subjects. The entire program is far above the average in entertainment value and should be seen by every lover of a game kid, a beautiful woman or a fast horse in the city.

'The Daring Young Man' at Fox Is Comedy of Newspaper Life

Gales of laughter greeted "The Daring Young Man," which opened Friday at the Fox theater. Jimmy Dunn's portrayal of the newspaper reporter who leaves his bride-to-be at the church while he dashes off on a secret assignment, is "the top" in madcap comedy.

Written by Claude Binyon and Sidney Skolsky, of newspaperman fame, "The Daring Young Man" shouldn't be missed. It is the hilarious story of a New York newspaperman who never tires of expressing his sarcastic views of marriage until he meets Mae Clarke, a reporter on a rival paper. A rapid-fire courtship is followed by plans for a quick marriage.

On his wedding day Jimmy is forced to cover an assignment in a jail without telling his betrothed of the circumstances. She gets worried and has an appeal broadcast for him. Dunn hears it in a madcap jail where favored prisoners are allowed telephones, radios, cafe meals and occasional leaves. The reporter manages to buy a "temporary parole" but is quickly brought back by two kidnapers, when the warden learns his true identity.

Mae Clark, about to marry another man, discovers her fiance's predicament and goes to the jail to see him. While there she is locked in, through Dunn's connivance. A reform committee arrives and a rib-rocking sequence winds up the film, which was directed by William A. Seiter and produced by Robert T. Kane for Fox Film. On the short feature program will be found an entertaining musical titled "Paree! Paree!" Also an interesting variety, "No Motor to Guide Him."

Capitol Has Two Stage Shows; 'McFadden's Flats' on Screen

Starting today, the Capitol offers another of its gigantic programs. It has 75 people on the stage and a hilarious comedy feature on the screen, "McFadden's Flats," starring Walter C. Kelly, the Virginia judge; Andy Clyde, Richard Cromwell, Jane Darwell, Betty Furness and George Barbier. The regular stage show for the week is the vaudeville unit, "Pot Pourri Revue," and, as an added offering, the theater has "Way Down South," another of those famous Reese School of Personality presentations.

Among outstanding stars of the vaudeville show are Honey Payne, known as the "stuttering fool" and impersonator of radio and screen stars; Leroy and Mack, international dance stars; Glyndon, king of the slack wire; the Lee Sisters, unusual dance trio; Nanita, in songs and romance; Bobbie Knott, the one-man band, and Juanita LeRoy, in fast dance routines.

Enrico Leide and his Capitolians will be augmented with Kerry King and his orchestra to provide music for the stage show and this combination will place 14 talented musicians on the Capitol's band stand. Mr. Leide will conduct the band during the presentation of "Way Down South."

The Capitol's feature, "McFadden's Flats," is a robust and colorful comedy about real folk that should appeal to every family. It marks the screen debut of Walter Kelly, known on the stage as the Virginia judge.

Kelly acts a rough-speaking but soft-hearted Irishman who rises from bricklaying to wealth. Opposite him is the famous screen comedian, Andy Clyde, acting an economical Scotchman and his ancient friendly enemy.

The picture deals with the life-long feud between these two lovable hard-shells, and of the romance between their children which finally brings them together.

Starting next Sunday, the Capitol will bring the long-awaited picture, "The Cowboy Millionaire," starring George O'Brien, to its screen.

Age-old legends of voracious vampires, accursed spirits who return to earth to feed upon human blood, provide the background for a modern mystery tale of eerie and thrilling drama —"The Mark of the Vampire," at Loew's Grand theater, with Lionel Barrymore, Elizabeth Allan, Bela Lugosi, Lionel Atwill and Jean Hersholt in principal roles. The film was directed by Tod Browning, who made many of Lon Chaney's most famous films, and Bela Lugosi returns to the type of character which made him famous in "Dracula."

"The Mark of the Vampire" is a modern story, laid in the ancient village of Visoka, in Czechoslovakia, where the dread legend of the living dead still terrorizes the citizens. At nightfull all the villagers take refuge in their cottages, the doors and windows tight closed, and wolf's-claw (a thorny herb) hung over every entrance, to exorcise the vampires.

Borotyn Castle dominated the country and here, many years ago, one Count Mora and his daughter, Luna, fell victim to vampires. They were found dead, tradition says, with small marks, as of teeth, at their throats and their bodies drained of blood. Since then, the count and his daughter have turned vampire and their spirits roam the countryside, seeking others whom they in turn might slay and convert into their kind.

This legend returns forcefully to every mind when the present owner of Borotyn Castle, Sir Karell, is found dead, his throat strangely marked, his body bloodless. The townspeople attribute his killing to vampires. Others scoff at the idea. His daughter, Irena; her fiance, Fedor, and their friend, Baron Otto, are among the skeptics.

But soon after Sir Karell's death, his daughter is similarly attacked. She is found just in time and her health is endangered. The famous Professor Zelen (Lionel Barrymore) is called to her side and to everyone's astonishment he immediately attributes her attack to vampires. Moreover, he sets out to search for the perpetrators of the attack.

The hunt for the spirits of a man and woman dead for centuries, and the extraordinary climax of the search brings "The Mark of the Vampire" to a daring and thrilling close, giving a human explanation to a mystery which seems to deal with the supernatural and the unknowable.

Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler Co-Star In Picture Now at Paramount

All Atlanta will be whistling and humming the new song hits introduced in "Go Into Your Dance," now playing at the Paramount theater. The cast is headed by Al Jolson, stage and screen star who introduced the talking picture, and his wife, Ruby Keeler, one-time musical comedy star who rose to fame on the screen in the last two years.

Never before have the two played together, each fearing to take the spotlight from the other. But in this picture they work together as a perfect romantic team.

Jolson shows more of his old-time serve, both in his singing and his acting than he has displayed in any other picture. His work with Miss Keeler seems to have given him an unusual stimulus. As a Broadway entertainer, in the picture, he is barred from the New York stage because of his fondness for the "ponies," also wine and women. After sharing honors with a little dancing girl in a midwest town he stages a comeback that sets the theatrical world aflame.

Miss Keeler is as sweet and winsome as ever as the dancing partner who is unable to hide her love for the great entertainer although he continually snubs her, having fallen for the wiles of a blues singer, the wife of the king of the underworld.

Helen Morgan, torch singer and piano sitter, is given a bigger part than usual. Her singing is excellent but she also has an important role as the other woman and rival of Miss Keeler for the love of Jolson, the entertainer. She handles a difficult part with rare artistry.

Glenda Farrell is the same wise-cracking, hard-boiled character she usually portrays, although in this picture she is not the gold digging type. Her work is fast and snappy and adds to the rollicking humor of the production. Others who do exceptionally fine work include Barton Maclane, Sharon Lynne, Patsy Kelly and Phil Regan.

Bobby Connelly, famous director of stage and screen musicals, has outdone all his previous work with the spectacular dance ensembles he created and staged for this picture.

The story by Bradford Ropes, author of "42nd Street," is not only hilariously funny, but is interspersed with intense dramatic moments and carries a most fascinating romance. The catchy tunes were written by the famous team of Harry Warren and Al Dubin.

"WANDERING JEW" AT HILAN THEATER SUNDAY, MONDAY

Today and Monday the Hilan theater will present "The Wandering Jew," starring Conrad Veidt with Peggy Ashcraft and a cast of 10,000. It pictures Jerusalem on the day of the crucifixion; the Crusades and the days of the Inquisition. Its dramatic story tells of a man who could not die. All through the film, which covers a period of four centuries, Veidt enacts the roles of four different men, or in reality, the four types of men he made of himself.

Tuesday only the Hilan will offer "Name the Woman," with Richard Cromwell and Arlene Judge. It is an exciting story of adventure and romance.

"Call It Luck," featuring Pat Patterson, Herbert Mundin and Charles Starrett, will be the featured picture for Wednesday only. It is a splendid comedy of an eccentric old man and his old horse.

"Sweet Adeline," Warner Brothers' musical triumph featuring Irene Dune with Hugh Herbert and Ned Sparks, will be on the screen at the Hilan Thursday and Friday. It has all the gayety and glitter of the glamorous, naughty nineties and some of the most popular song hits ever offered.

Saturday only Jack Holt will be in "I'll Fix It," in which he is assisted by Mona Barrie. It is a fast-moving action story.

"ONE MORE SPRING" ATTRACTION TODAY FOR EMPIRE FANS

"One More Spring," a Fox production starring Janet Gaynor and Warner Baxter, will be the attraction at the Empire theater today. Miss Gaynor has a deeply emotional role as a courageous girl alone in the world, and Baxter is the romantic adventurer who clings to the right to dream. Others featured are Walter King and Rosemary Ames.

"Clive of India" will be the feature for Monday and Tuesday, with Ronald Colman starred in the title role. The story traces the rise of Robert Clive, played by Colman, from a $25-a-year clerk in the East India Company to the conqueror of a nation. Loretta Young is cast as the wife, Lady Clive, while Colin Clive, C. Aubrey Smith and Cesar Romero are prominent in the cast.

TRAIL CLUB GROUP ON WEEK-END HIKE

Members of the Georgia Appalachian Trail Club, composed of outdoor lovers are spending this week-end hiking over scenic beauty in the vicinity of Chattanooga as guests of the Cumberland Hiking Club.

The Georgia mountain climbers visited the Castle Caverns, near Chattanooga, last night. Today they will visit Rock City and then will climb the west side of Lookout Mountain. Warner W. Hall, of Decatur, is president of the Georgia Appalachian Trail Club.

Georgia Now Playing Mae West In Latest Film, 'Goin' To Town'

In a picture sparkling with modernity and fun, a new Mae West returns to the screen to "do 'em wrong" and knock them dead in the grand, old Westian fashion. It is her latest picture, "Goin' to Town," which is being held over for one week at the Georgia theater.

Mae's costumes are dashing and new, the situations for the picture are up-to-date, the backgrounds are ultra-modern, but Mae West is still the same. Shrewd, ingenions, robust and full of sly humor and observation.

Mae West's adventures in "Goin' to Town" open in a western mining town. A cattle baron's widow with money to burn and warm affections, she picks Paul Cavanagh, a handsome Englishman, as the object of her affections. But Cavanagh mistrusts his feelings and runs off to Buenos Aires.

Bringing her horses to the Buenos Aires races as an excuse, Mae West continues her campaign, still without effect. Then she decides she must change to win his love with characteristic directness, marries an impoverished young socialite, Monroe Owsley, in order to get into socsiety. But this doesn't turn out as well as she expected. Her rival, Marjorie Gateson, plots against her, her husband proves to be a washout.

The "tall, dark and handsomes" who support Miss West in "Goin' to Town" are well chosen and more than usually effective. They include, beside Cavanagh, Ivan Lebedeff, Tito Coral, Fred Nohler Sr. and Grant Withers.

A well-chosen and entertaining list of short subjects, including "The Green Fedora," a musical short in technicolor, and the latest news events conclude a well-rounded program.

MYSTERY DRAMA WITH BILL POWELL AT THE BUCKHEAD

"The Kennel Murder Case" with William Powell and Mary Astor is the screen attraction at the Buckhead theater today. This is a good mystery melodrama, holding one in suspense throughout. It is worked out very cleverly and there is a novel twist to it, in that the detective is aided in his work by two dogs.

George Arliss in "The Iron Duke" is the attraction for Monday and Tuesday. This is a very lavish production. Arliss, leading the English army, mobilizes the allied armies as soon as he learns that Napoleon had escaped from Elba. The story, dealing with one of the major events in world history, is gripping and well done.

"Gridiron Flash" with Eddie Quillan and Betty Furness will be seen on Wednesday only. This is a good football story, with a pleasing romantic interest.

"Smart Money" with Edward G. Robinson is the picture for Thursday. This is the story of a small town gambler who goes to the city, thinking he can outwit the law. Others in the cast are Evelyn Knapp, Boris Karloff and Margaret Livingston.

"Devil Dogs of the Air" with James Cagney, Pat O'Brien and Margaret Lindsay is the offering for Friday and Saturday. Warner Brothers, with the help of the United States marine corps, have produced a spectacular and exciting air picture.

VISITOR SURPRISED AT SMALL SPACE USED BY THEATERS

Atlanta's motion picture theaters are among the most backward in the country when it comes to acquainting the public with their entertainment offerings through the medium of newspaper advertising, in the opinion of Don Carle Gillette, managing editor of The Film Daily, who was here last week in connection with the Allied States exhibitor convention at the Hotel Piedmont.

Gillette expressed amazement at the small amount of advertising space used by the theaters here even on films of such outstanding merit that in most other towns they are exploited on elaborate scales and consequently attract the interest of larger number of movie-goers.

Gillette says when the theaters of a city as a whole do not advertise adequately, thereby making it impossible for the newspapers to carry large departments of motion picture news, the theaters lose much business and the public in turn misses a lot of worth-while pictures.

The Round Town Players presented Oliver Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer" at the O'Keefe Junior High auditorium to a large and appreciative audience. Mrs. Danforth's Recital

Earle Chester Smith presented Mrs. Edward F. Danforth in a recital Friday evening in his studio in the Grand Theater building to a representative group of the city's prominent musicians and friends of the performer.

Mrs. Danforth essayed a program of generous and ambitious proportions with a poise and sureness that made her playing most satisfying. Her tone is warm and appealing, her technique possessed of clarity and skill, her musical instincts sensitive and fine, and her memorization unfailing. She began with the chorale "Jesus Bleibet meine Freude," Bach-Bauer; the next being Schumann's "Faschingsschwank Aus Wien," followed by MacDowell's "Prelude, Opus 10, No. 1." There was fine color in the two Debussy numbers, "Danseuses de Delphes" and "Clair de Lune," revealing a particular flair the artist possesses for Debussy. An attractive and fascinating presentation were the series of little modern pieces comprising "Scenes d'Enfants," composed by Mompou. A dazzling climax to the program came in a brilliant performance of the "Artists' Life" waltzes by Richard Strauss, arranged for two pianos by Chasins, with Mrs. William Elsas at the second piano with Mrs. Danforth.

Little Symphony Concert

The Emory University Little Symphony orchestra achieved some of the best playing of its career since this writer has known the organization in its concert at Glenn Memorial auditorium Thursday evening. Many plaudits go to Dr. Malcolm H. Dewey, their director, and to each performer for the excellent ensemble. The opening number, "Les Toreros" from the prelude to Bizet's "Carmen," a number played incidental to the program while the collection was being taken, Borowski's "Adoration," and the final number of the program, "Danse Bacchanale," from Saint-Saens' "Samson et Dalila," stood out as the inspired moments of the symphonic part of the program.

Three guest artists scored successes for their performances. Bernice Johnson sang Micaela's aria from "Carmen" with orchestral accompaniment, winning an ovation for her brilliant singing. Later in the program she sang a group of French songs, with Clara Belle Adams at the piano.

Ralph Gibbs, pianist with the glee club and the orchestra, gave a beautiful interpretation of the piano score of the Schumann "Concerto in A Minor for Piano and Orchestra."

Decatur Concert.

Irene Leftwich, pianist, and Minna Hecker, soprano, shared honors bestowed on them by a large audience at the Decatur Woman's Club last Sunday afternoon in the last of the season's Sunday afternoon concerts at the club, presented through the fine arts division, under the co-chairmanship of Mrs. Walter Herbert and Mrs. S. R. Christie Jr.

Miss Leftwich played with a technical agility and a satisfying musicianship that delighted her audience. Lovely momentoes of an exquisite program are her performances of the "Gavotte," from "Iphigenia in Aulis," Gluck-Brahms; "Scherzo," Mendelssohn; "Ballade, Opus 23," Chopin, and "The Sunken Cathedral," Debussy.

Miss Hecker employed her precious gift of a coloratura soprano voice of rarest quality in charming manner and loveliest art. Calling for superlative praise were her renditions of "The Cherry Tree," Goatley; "O Little Songs," Silberta, and "The Swallows," Dell 'Aqua. Alice Gray Harrison gave splendid support in piano accompaniments.

DALTON, Ga., May 25.—Cordial interest is centered today in the announcement made by Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Lucky Hamilton of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Elinor Elizabeth Hamilton, to William Harrison Hightower Jr., of Thomaston, Ga. Their wedding on Saturday afternoon, June 29, at 6:30 o'clock at the First Presbyterian church here will be one of the outstanding social events of the early summer.

The bride-elect is a popular recent graduate of Agnes Scott, who has been connected with the college this past year as alumnae field secretary. The bride-elect's mother was formerly Miss Ethel Downing Brothers, of prominent Alabama family connections. Her paternal grandparents were the late Mr. and Mrs. George Washington Hamilton Sr., originally from Tennessee, who have been instrumental in the upbuilding of the community.

Mr. Hightower is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. William Harrison Hightower Sr., of Thomaston. He was graduated from Emory University in 1934 with a degree from the business college. While at Emory he was an active member of the Sigma Chi fraternity, serving as president of his chapter one year. He is associated with his father in the Thomaston Cotton Mills. Mrs. Hightower was, before her marriage, Miss Anne Turner, of LaGrange, whose esteemed family is identified with the historic and religious development of the section. The paternal grandparents of the bridegroom-elect, R. E. Hightower Sr., and the late Mrs. R. E. Hightower, were outstahding pioneer settlers around Thomaston and have been influential in the community and in business circles.

The wedding plans of the popular couple are of interest.

It was also voted that council meetings in the future were to be of shorter duration, leaving out any speaker or formal program, and having only a discussion of problems from other parent-teacher groups. Mrs. Sidney O. Smith, D. A. R. Librarian, Issues Message to Georgia Chapters Today

Mrs. Sidney O. Smith, state librarian, sends the following message to the Georgia chapters: "As your state librarian, I was gratified to report for the last D. A. R. year your gift of 12 books to the Memorial Continental library, in addition to those volumes sent to the approved schools and to the Merchant Marine library. For the most part they were county histories. The History of Savannah, presented by the Savannah chapter, out of print as it is, written over a hundred years ago, was rare and represented research labor on the part of Mrs. J. N. McBride, chapter librarian.

"However, the roll of county histories on the shelves of our Washington library and the library at the state capitol at Atlanta is far from complete, so an especial drive will be made during the coming year for the presentation through the D. A. R. chapters of these histories, as they are completed and for those already published. And now for the real request of my letter: Will every chapter regent see that a chapter librarian is appointed, that her name and address is sent to Mrs. Sidney O. Smith, Gainesville, Ga., with the information as to whether your town or county has a local library. This can be sent me on a postal, but I do wish to receive the information before the end of June, so that I may get in touch with my librarians during the summer months. My pet D. A. R. dream now is that the coming year will see the beginning of many historical and genealogical shelves in Georgia town libraries fostered by the local D. A. R. In the meantime send me the address of your chapter librarian."

Mrs. Arthur Mallory was named regent of the LaGrange chapter, at the final meeting held at the home of Mrs. T. G. Polhill. Others elected were Mesdames Tom Callaway, vice regent; W. R. McCall, recording secretary; J. B. Blanks, auditor; Raleigh Park, registrar; L. E. Floyd, historian, and R. R. Lane, chaplain. Other business included the reading of the annual report by Mrs. John Faver, retiring regent, and reports from officers and committee chairmen. Announcement was made that sufficient funds had been accumulated for the D. A. R. scholarship at LaGrange College and that framed copies of the flag code would be placed at the courthouse and Memorial library at an early date.

Customary rituals preceded the reading of the president-general's message by Mrs. Arthur Bradfield, and the flag code by Mrs. T. G. Polhill. Mrs. Paul Earl, of Anderson, S. C., brought greetings from the Cateeche chapter, at Anderson. A feature of the program was the talk by Clifford L. Smith on "Old-Time Customs in Georgia." Mr. Smith, who has contributed much time to the organization during the year, was presented a gift by Mrs. Neil Glass as an expression of appreciation from the group. Mrs. Polhill, assisted by Mrs. R. A. Malone, Mrs. Raleigh Park and Miss Roberta Black, co-hostesses, served tea.

Mrs. Jena C. Collier, state chairman of Flag Day, sends the following message to the chapter regents: "I have written a personal message to every chapter regent asking them to celebrate Flag Day June 14. Let me urge you to do this and report to me just how you observed this important day."

Officers elected for the next two years for Tommachichi chapter, in Clarksville, were regent, Mesdames Henry Forrester, Demorest; vice regent, Everette Kitchen, Baldwin; recording secretary and corresponding secretary, T. Earl Stribling; treasurer, I. J. Sutton, Clarksville; historian, J. C. Porter; registrar, O. E. Floe, Demorest; chaplain, C. L. Percey; parliamentarian, J. C. Porter, Clarksville.

Lancaster, conducted the devotional. The chapter voted to give an additional $5 toward the placing of the stage coach marker at Shady Dale. The chapter donated $5 to the local Child Welfare Council. Mrs. Smith Wilson and Mrs. Oscar Holland were appointed to represent the chapter in the council. Program given was: Music by Mrs. Loy Crawford; report on the state conference, Mrs. O. E. Lancaster and Miss Kate Aiken; solo, Mrs. Gibbs; Indian reminiscences, Mrs. O. E. Lancaster; piano solo, Miss Emily Cook.

Mrs. Billups Johnson

Mrs. William T. Campbell

Mrs. C. T. Mathews

Newcomers Join Social Ranks In Atlanta

By SALLY FORTH.

Nothing is so stimulating to social ranks as the presence of new faces. And certainly Atlanta society is particularly fortunate in that its ranks have been augmented by an unusually charming and attractive group of new faces. For who can deny that the beautiful figures adorning this page would add interest and animation to any gathering?

The younger married contingent will find especial pleasure in the presence here of Mrs. Billups Johnson, the former Betty Bradberry, of Athens. Billups, you know, is the nephew of Mrs. Hughes Spalding, and his mother is Mrs. J. M. Billing, of Athens. In case you haven't glimpsed Betty's blue-eyed, brown-haired beauty, you may be prepared to meet a very charming person. She and Billups are residing in the Ponce de Leon court.

Mrs. William T. Campbell, who came from near-by Rome, hardly needs an introduction, so well known are she and Mr. Campbell in Atlanta social life. As Sally told you recently, they are living in Mrs. Ross P. Cox's Eleventh street apartment, the Campbells and the Coxes having virtually "swapped" homes, including servants and furniture, following the marriage of Atlanta's beloved Mrs. Frank Holland to Dr. Cox, of Rome.

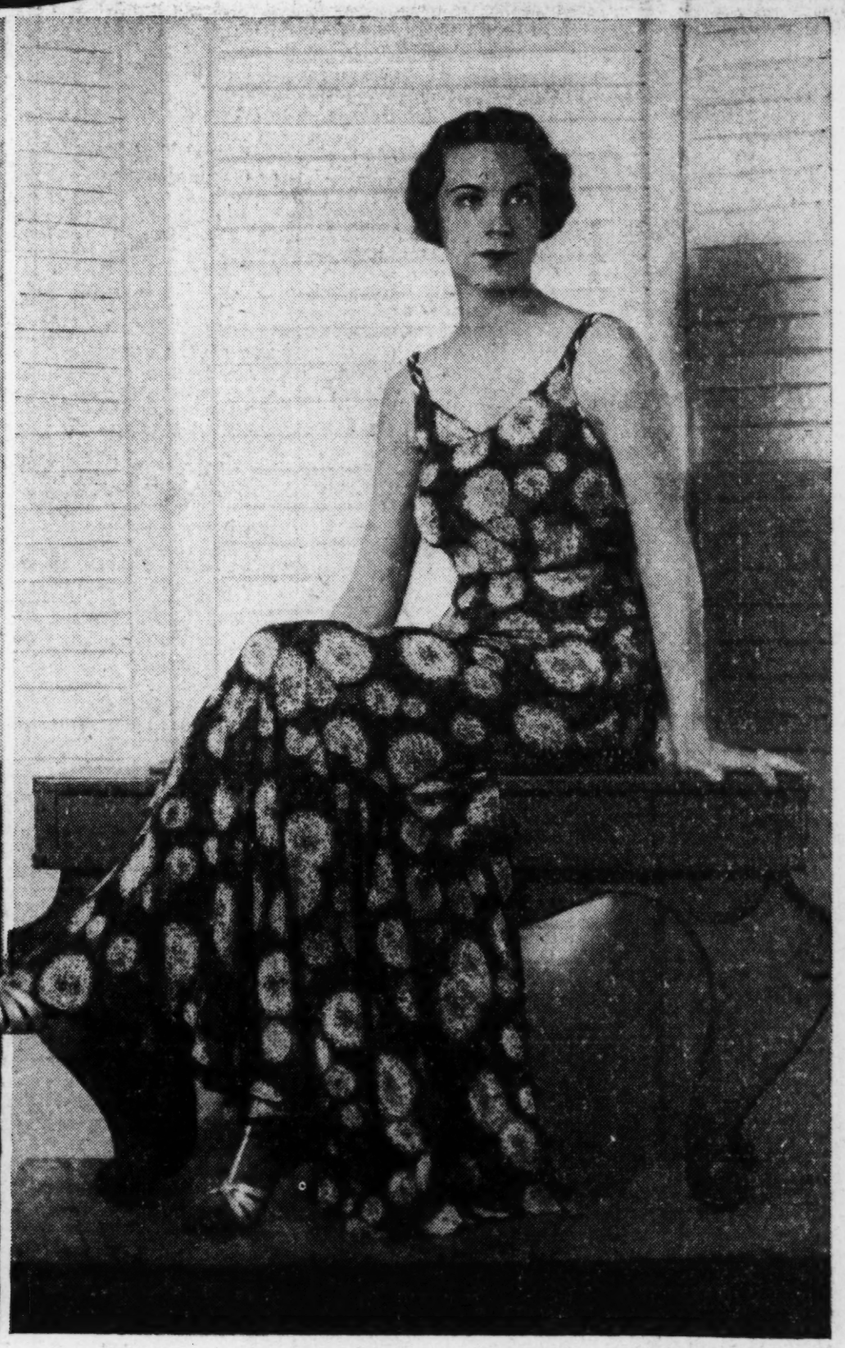

Another lovely newcomer to whom Atlanta society has always laid partial claim and to whom a royal welcome was extended, is Mrs. Clifford T. Mathews, the former Edith McKenzie Mercer, of Montezuma. Edith has often visited here as the guest of her cousin, Obie McKenzie Black, and her recent marriage to Major Mathews, during his station here, is a happy coincidence, as far as Atlanta is concerned. They are making their home at the Georgian Terrace, and the acquisition of the beautiful bride is a matter of mutual congratulation to both army and civilian circles.

Atlanta is indebted to the Eastern Air Transport Company for bringing here for residence Mrs. Charles William France, whose husband is operating manager of the company. Mr. and Mrs. France came here from Denver, Col., and have established residence in the Biltmore apartments. Mrs. France is an accomplished musician, and cultural circles will find her as inspiring as she is good to look upon.

Exotic-looking Mrs. MacDaniel Fowler came from Cleveland, Ohio, to join the ranks of the younger married contingent. Her romance with Dr. Fowler had its inception when, as the former Marion Malm, she journeyed to Atlanta by airplane to visit Sue Burnett before she became Mrs. Frank Davis. It was at Sue's debut party at the Piedmont Driving Club that she met Dr. Fowler and they were married last February. Dr. and Mrs. Fowler reside in an attractive apartment on Eleventh street, wherein they dispense delightful hospitality.

Oglethorpe University Woman's Board Presents Dr. Jacobs' Picture to College

The woman's board of Oglethorpe University has again justified its position as a vital factor in the life and history of the college by presenting to the university a life size portrait of the president, Dr. Thornwell Jacobs. The presentation took place at the meeting of the board held Saturday afternoon in the library of Lupton hall and came as a complete surprise to the members of the board and the trustees and faculty of the university.

This exquisite art treasure was the personal gift of Mrs. Willis Westmoreland to the woman's board, and it was in turn presented to the university. It is the work of the distinguished artist, Charles Frederick Naegele, and is a masterpiece that will grow more and more priceless with the passage of the years. It will be more valuable to Oglethorpe than a Van Dyke or Sir Joshua Reynolds for it will preserve the living personality of the dynamic, courageous, poetic and idealistic founder of the university. The figure in the picture is seated, wearing the academic gown of doctor of laws.

It has long been the dream of the woman's board to acquire such a portrait, and it is fitting that it should have been presented at this particular time as Dr. Jacobs had elected to honor at this commencement 12 outstanding women, distinguished in their respective fields, and who were present as the guests of the woman's board during the presentation.

Mrs. Westmoreland, president of the board, presided at the business session; Mrs. T. C. Perkins, library chairman, announced a gift from Miss Helen Knox Spain, of a set of 10 volumes on popular sciences and 16 other books donated by members. Mrs. Westmoreland introduced Mrs. Katherine Hillyer Connerat, past president of the board, and vice chairman of the executive committee, who spoke of the part the board has had in the collection of art works. She called on Mrs. John K. Ottley, chairman of the executive committee, who is a matchless speaker, and represented Mrs. Westmoreland in presenting the portrait to the woman's board, and then in turn presented it to Dr. Edgar Watkins, chairman of the board of directors of the university. Dr. Watkins accepted it in behalf of the university, and the portrait was unveiled by Miss Dorothy Sweeny, student at the college and daughter of Mrs. Robert P. Sweeny, chairman of the mother's committee.

Mrs. Westmoreland introduced the artist, Mr. Naegele, who told of the pleasure and inspiration the painting of the picture had been to him. Dr. Jacobs introduced his distinguished guests and the meeting adjourned for a social period before driving to the lake, where the students staged a water carnival in celebration of the renaming of the lake henceforth to be known as Phoebe lake in honor of the mother of William Randolph Hearst, who made the ownership of the lake by the university a possibility.

William Randolph Hearst Jr. represented his father and acknowledged this tribute to his grandmother. Governor Talmadge accepted the lake on behalf of the state of Georgia, and responses were made by the heads of the departments in the university and the president of the woman's board.

Guests returned to the formal campus to witness the one-act play presented by the Players' Club and to hear the glee clubs, and enjoy a buffet supper. As the crowning event of the day, a lecture on "Our Neighbor Universe," illustrated with lantern slides, was delivered by Dr. Annie Jump Cannon, of Harvard University, who is perhaps the most noted woman astronomer in the world.

Mrs. J. B. Francis Herreshoff, chairman of distinguished guests, assisted in entertaining. The committee on arrangements and decorations included Mrs. Hugh Bancker, Mrs. Charles Goodman and Mrs. Robert P. Sweeny.

Newcomers Join Social Ranks In Atlanta

Jack Donovan, are with the Wardlaws.

Anne and Jack find the ocean so alluring that they keep bathing suits in the cabana for frequent changes and take at least four dips a day, sometimes joining the merry group of children in the pool at the Cloister casino and sometimes frolicking in the waves off their own beach.

When Jack Donovan celebrates his fourth birthday on May 28 he will not miss one whit of the excitement by being away from home, for Mrs. Wardlaw is planning an ideal birthday party to be given in the picturesque walled patio of their house. The small guests will play beside the little fountain, where a flock of realistic wooded ducks lend an interesting note, and there will be favors from a fish pond, as well as other requisites of a successful birthday party.

Among youthful Atlantans helping Jack to celebrate his birthday will be Nancy, Asa and Helen Candler, children of Mr. and Mrs. John Candler, who are at their cottage; Joel Hunter III, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joel Hunter Jr., who are spending the month in a cottage, and small Newell Bryan, the blond and curly-haired daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wright Bryan, who with her mother, the former Ellen Newell, is visiting Colonel Isaac Newell at his Sea Island home.

Arriving this week to spend the rest of the month with the Wardlaws will be Mrs. Daniel A. Davis and Anne Smith, of Augusta, who will form the inspiration for numerous gatherings of the island colony.

HERE'S a tip for you would-be brides. Because Margaret Allais didn't hand him "a line," Leon Woodall fell for her like a ton of bricks and their engagement is announced today.

Leon is a Sigma Chi at Tech and because he is big and strong and dark and handsome his classmates and frat brothers call him "Primo." Well, Primo went to a dance one night two years ago and saw tall blond Margaret Allais. An introduction was arranged at once. He danced time after time with the blond Margaret. There was something about her which piqued his interest. She was the first girl he had met who didn't hand him a line. However, many dates followed for the two, and last summer Primo spent many weekends at the Tate Mountain Estates, where Margaret and her family spent the season.

Sally hasn't heard if the romantic setting of the mountain resort found Margaret any less Sphinxlike, but, according to Primo, "she had what it takes," and now they are making plans for a wedding in the fall.

AS IS customary at this season of the year, college graduates and their activities are occupying the center of the stage. When Judy Beers graduates on Tuesday from Guston Hall in Washington her parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Beers, will give her a car as a graduation present.

The car will only be the beginning of a series of summer joys for this lovely young belle. As has been mentioned in this column before, she will attend the famous June week festivities at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Following these good times, Judy will go to New York, where she will visit her classmate, Charlotte Christie. Heading south again, Judy will pause in Concord, N. C., en route to Atlanta to visit another classmate, Sara Copeland, who will entertain at a house party for some of the Gunston Hall girls.

The many friends of Judy feel a certain pride in her graduation this year. Due to an extended illness during the winter, following an accident, Judy missed many classes. Her keen mind and studious nature, however, resulted in her completing the work in time to graduate with her classmates.

Speaking of Judy going to June week, it is apropos to mention that Martha de Golian will also be listed as one of the visiting belles at the Naval Academy dances. Martha, you know, attends Georgetown Visitation convent in Washington and has attended many of the social affairs at the academy.

Piano Recital.

Claudia Hayes will present a group of her pupils in a piano recital Tuesday, May 28, at her home, 403 South McDonough street, in Decatur, at 4 p. m. In the group are Jean Thames, Marion Rosenzweig, Edward Flowers, Cecil Helms, Ellen Cannon, Harriet Hanner, Mims Wilkinson and Marjorie Chambers.

Deafened Author Describes Joy Of Hearing With Acousticon

Ernest Elmo Calkins, author of "Louder Please" and other works, in a foreword to fellow sufferers advises reading the booklet, "Defeating Deafness," by Asabelle Beglam.

"You who read this and I who write it have one thing in common. However, we may differ in physique or temperament, we both know what it means to be hard of hearing. I have been deafened practically all my life and have now become worse, more so perhaps than any of you who read this. Whatever you may feel at this present moment about your affliction, be sure I have known that stage of it, for I have been through them all."

"With a lifetime experience with this exasperating handicap, I can say to you with the utmost confidence there is no thrill like that of being able to hear again after years of baffling and embarrassing disappointment. The whole world takes on a new radiance as though another window had been opened.

"Therefore, I urge you to read this little book ("Defeating Deafness") earnestly and thoughtfully. Take it to heart and qualify to cope with your problem. It may prove to be the turning point of your life. The first step is the hardest, to admit one is deafened, admit it to oneself and to the world; but the compensations outweigh the penalties, as you will find.

"Give up the struggle of trying to get by as a normally hearing person. The hard of hearing are happiest when they renounce the innocent pose of pretending to hear and begin to accept all the drawbacks—and all the benefits as well—of being deafened."

The booklet referred to by Mr. Calkins is available to the hard of hearing without cost. If interested, write A. K. Hawkes Co., 67 Whitehall street, Atlanta, for free copy of this most interesting treatise of deafness and how it can be successfully defeated.—(adv.)

SOULS OF FLOWERS

Since romantic literature began, the masters have invested with mighty potency the appeal of perfume to the senses.... Here Raeburn Van Buren has depicted a young man, touched by the beauty of a girl—but he cannot dismiss the rapturous vapors, "souls of flowers," which come to him out of memory—of another girl, a girl he can't forget! Forgetting, as everyone knows, isn't easy—and fragrances do remind!

Jinx of Queen Elizabeth's Ring Haunts Her Gold Hunt

Lola Lost Her Rich Persian, Irish and American Suitors—But Hopes to Strike Real "Pay Dirt" in Canada

SHE'S been accused of it before; now she admits it. Yes, Lola Harris is a gold-digger!

When Lola sued Sir Maurice Fitzgerald, twenty-first Knight of Kerry—but the first in Lola's bailiwick—demanding he make amends to the tune of $100,000 for having staved off for three years the consummation of a promise to marry her, malicious tongues wagged. And, just because she was a chorus girl at the time, gossips insinuated it was all a little mining venture.

Lola was pretty sore, and still sorer when she didn't get the 100 "grand." What helped to keep her "burned up" was the fact that, in the meantime, she had sacrificed her chance to wed Ahmed Mirza, Shah of Persia, whom she had met in Paris during the days of those wild extravagances which cost him his throne at Teheran.

But Lola had learned the lesson of the main chance. Never again would she recline, decline and pine; she had lost good old Shah Mirza doing just that, due to her faith in Sir Maurice. So when George Livingstone Clewes, Dartmouth graduate and a budding playwright, came along and cast appreciative eyes at her piquant face and figure, fetchingly set off by a wealth of corn-colored locks, she let the breach-of-promise suit against Sir Maurice ride and applied herself assiduously to cultivating her latest prospect.

But, after a year of the most devoted attention, the ardor of the young American suddenly cooled. In tears, Lola learned that a reporter, quizzing Young Clewes about his reputed engagement to the pretty show-girl, who meantime had graduated to a role in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," had been told that no such engagement existed! Later, Clewes amplified this statement by declaring that a marked disparity in their ages made marriage undesirable. This was too, too much! Was Miss Harris mad—really mad? She was. Clear through!

And, now that the kettle has been painted black so often, Lola's going to let it go at that—except to add a finishing touch by applying a nice, shiny coat of varnish. She's going to scotch the gossip-mongers by forestalling them henceforth—for she's actually assuming the role of a genuine gold-digger. With all the accoutrements. And that means—not rouge and lip-stick; not daring garb and snaring smirk, nor yet the lucrative law suit.

INTERNATIONALLY WOOED
Here's Former "Alice" Harris, Showgirl Sweetheart Successively of Ahmed Mirza, Then Shah of Persia; Sir Maurice Fitzgerald, Irish Peer, and George Livingstone Clewes, Dramatist.

Nothing like that! It's picks and shovels for Lola hereafter—and real soil (perhaps even with real nuggets in it) for her to sink them in. Gold-digging with a vengeance, that requires muscle rather than a moué, and in regions where "map" has a distinctly different definition than on Broadway!

For Lola is headed for Canada and the gold fields of Gogama and Kirkland at the first sign of the Spring break-up of ice and snow—to flirt with Fortune, by hunting the good grey ore. She's going to join a prospecting party headed for those regions; and when she strikes "pay dirt," she's going to sell the claim to one of those rich syndicates that are always springing up when there's anything to promote and catapult into a listing on the Stock Exchange.

And Lola's going to be lucky—she knows it, and she says so, emphatically. Why? Well, we'll let you in on the secret. She's lost one very valuable jinx that Sir Maurice gave her. It was an heirloom that had been in his family since the days of the first Lord Kerry, way back in 1258—a solitaire gold-band ring which Queen Elizabeth, at the height of her power in the Sixteenth Century, bestowed on the handsome Duke of Anjou, brother of Henry III of France, only to pitch the two into a violent quarrel, at the climax of which the royal courtier threw the bauble back at the raging imperious ruler.

"I should have thrown it back at Sir Maurice the minute he presented it to me," Lola explained. "Our courtship was getting along grand until that happened, just as was the case three hundred years ago at Windsor Castle. It jinxed our match as it did that ancient one, and it has brought me nothing but big grief.

"We met in a Bohemian sort of way, did Sir Maurice and I, while I was playing with one of the annual editions of the 'Spice' series of shows—never mind which one—on a foray from Broadway to the Canadian centers. His apartment adjoined mine at a Montreal hotel, and he rapped on the door one morning in the wee hours while we girls were getting some relaxation after the show, and stutteringly asked if we wouldn't mind—he hadn't slept well—and all that sort of thing, you know. What he meant to imply was that we were making an awful lot of noise—which I admit we were. And for the first time in my life I made a concession to a mere male; I insisted that the girls call it off for the night. Gee, after such a sacrifice, why shouldn't he fall for me? And didn't he! Until he gave me the ring.

NOT LUCKY IN LOVE

"But that's over now—for, luckily, I lost the ring; I just couldn't bring myself to give it away or throw it away. I suppose one just doesn't part with heirlooms. And to make doubly sure that my luck has changed, I've also changed my name—for I'm Lola Harris now, and all those things, like jiltings, happened to Alice Harris, who used to be me."

So here's hoping Alice—we mean Lola—strikes real "pay dirt." Then won't Sir Maurice be sorry he gave Lola that "jilting ring" and Georgie Clewes, who hasn't proved any great shucks at playwriting, be equally sad that he quibbled about Lola's age?

OUT FOR GOLD!
And Here's Lola Harris, Off for the Mines; Once She Was Alice Harris—and She's Still Pretty Despite the Jinx Which Queen Elizabeth's Ring Cast Over Her Love Affairs.

FOSSIL-HUNTING PHOTOGRAPHER UNEARTHS MAN'S FIRST FOOTPRINTS

How the Laborious Efforts of One "Missing Link" to Crawl Finally Developed Lungs and Five-Toed Feet, Then—

FIRST AMPHIBIAN
Vic Guinness Pictures It as Reconstructed by Dr. Bradford Willard from New Evidence of Its Probable Appearance, Just Discovered.

Dr. Castor, Who'll Trace Tracks of the Ancient Paramphibian.

GOT A THRILL
D. S. Harding, Fossil - Hunting Photographer, to Whose Zeal the First 5-Toed Creature on Earth Owes Its Immortalization.

MAN has looked for the first time on his original footprints. More strictly stated—a man.

What is more, the unique privilege was not wasted on a merely curious individual, with no further thought than to puzzle idly over the strangest and most significant of all imprints by a living organism since the beginning of time on this terrestial globe. It fell to the lot of a photographer to make the discovery—and one who makes fossil-hunting his hobby, at that.

So, of course, he lost no time in photographing his memorable find, recording it for posterity with all the thrill which a boy derives from rifling a robin's nest to add to his collection of delicately hued eggs or a student in enlarging his store of mineralogical or botanical specimens.

But of much greater scientific purport. What D. S. Harding found—and photographed—one early Spring morning, as he poked and puttered around among the boulders and slags of a stone quarry in the Susquehanna Mountains—just across the New York-Pennsylvania border from Binghamton, N. Y.—is shown in a photo which accompanies this article.

At first glance, the picture appears to resemble others of a similar nature taken in the primitive rocky regions of the Southwest and in ancient foreign lands. For that reason, the Harding negatives did not seem in any sense epochal—and, for the same reason, there seemed to be no rational basis for the extreme excitement of Dr. Bradford Willard, associate geologist of the Pennsylvania Topographical and Geologic Survey at Harrisburg, when he looked at them.

It isn't recorded that Dr. Willard emitted an Indian warhoop or executed a Highland fling in his joy, but he readily could be forgiven any lapse of dignity in face of what his enlightened scrutiny revealed. For, in counting the toes revealed in this aboriginal footprint, he found there were five!

As previous research had disclosed only three, this WAS something! In a veritable frenzy of scientific fervor, Dr. Willard set about reconstructing the salamander-like creature that took a walk—also on one early Spring morning: the Spring of Life, when protoplasms first took form in the marshes. And from the tell-tale marks in what had once been ocean mud, mutated and petrified through the ages into rock, he evolved the oldest of land-living vertebrates—the "missing link" that connects the lung-less fish of a onetime all-ocean universe with the first flora and fauna of the earth.

Basing his mental picture of this "Susquehanna salamander" upon the infallible Bertillion of time, as inscribed on the walls of the vaults of the ages, Dr. Willard recreated a theoretical fish-mammal—a creature six to eight inches long, of the general proportions of a lizard. It had two fore-legs in the shape of fins but showing evidence of two or three frail toes on each—and two hind legs and feet, each with five unmistakably distinct toes!

Apparently it had great congenital difficulty in taking its first strides, each of which covered about two inches—the first faltering footsteps on the globe of the animal kingdom, to be distinguished successively by reptile, dinosaur, ape—and man. For depressions in the rock between the legs indicate that it dragged its stomach; and it is evident that, in time, this process calloused the skin and provided the original fish-mammals with immediate descendants whose dragging paunches were armor-plated.

The latter provision was especially valuable in facilitating the dual life of this first amphibian—so that it could crawl ashore or back into the water without abdominal abrasions. And so that it could remain out of water for considerable periods, on shore or on the surface of the water, it was equipped with a sort of primitive bladder, later to develop into a pair of lungs, in his more refined physical successors.

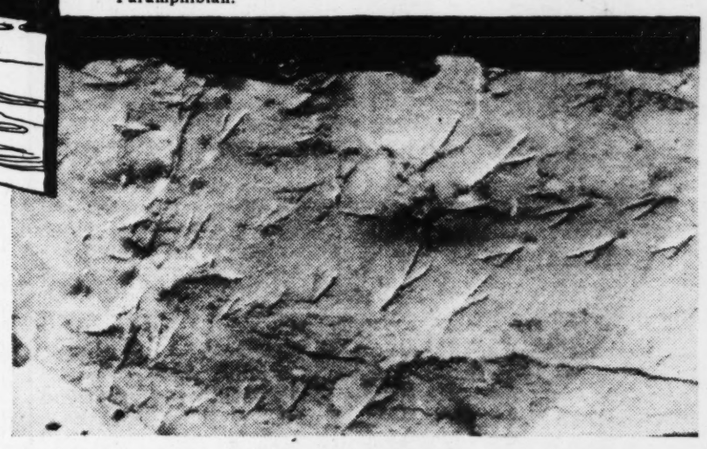

A dragging tail, too, slowed his progress, apparently—and so the tail in time became elevated, in the apes. Later, in man, it disappeared entirely. Leave it to Nature!

Other organic and anatomical changes took place as the salamander became more and more accustomed to land sojourn. Chemical changes adapted the eye to a wider range of vision, breathing of oxygen dilated its tiny nostrils and enlarged them, and ears for hearing began to develop. Environment and need dictated a transformation that soon brought complete divorcement from its watery cradle and created a new species—the next elaboration of zoogenic development.

Appropriately, Dr. Willard has dubbed the five-toed amphibians as Paramphibius. He places the invasion and adaptation of this piscatorial offspring to land-lubber purposes at three to four hundred million years ago. If you must check up on the Professor, go ahead and count that over on your fingers!

However, Dr. Kenneth E. Castor, of the Department of Geology of Cornell University, isn't awed in the least by that figure. He's going to go Dr. Willard a hundred million years better. After picking up the trail of the Paramphibius at Susquehanna and attempting to expand the zone of his paleozoic frolics to include the region between Towanda, Pa., and Binghamton, N. Y., he is going to take his class in geologic history on an expedition to the rock-bound country between Ithaca and the Catskill Mountains, in the belief that among these older crags and crannies and creek-beds he will be able to discover the fossil remains of a species of the Paramphibius which will exemplify the very first stage of their transition from a fish to a mammal state.

These specimens, if found, Dr. Castor believes, will reveal the ancestor of the sloth, that once roamed Central New York and Northern Pennsylvania, to have had fins in place of hind feet—as well as of hind feet—with which they essayed their first tentative and snail-like steps—to set the evolutionary forces of conscious life and reasoning creatures under way, and corroborate the once so indignantly pooh-poohed theory of one Charles Darwin.

TELL-TALE FOOTPRINTS
—and the Tale They Tell Is Man's Oldest One, for It Was Written by His First Land Ancestor, the 5-Toed Paramphibian, on Ocean Mud, Now Rock, 400,000,000 Years Ago.

The LAW of the PARIS JUNGLE

The famous Apache is dead as the dodo, but in his place is a fellow just as tough and better organized, copying the manners of American mobdom. . . . Here is the first of a vivid series on the "milieu," or French underworld, written by a brilliant Paris reporter

A woman, once beautiful, lies in the dusk there. She will never again see the glorious vista of the Paris streets, never sip another cocktail in the discreet and luxurious bar she quitted half an hour earlier. She is dead.

Grinning gargoyles made by medieval craftsmen look down from Paris churches on a city whose crime is as violent and as vicious as it was in the Middle Ages.

A few years ago the famous Apache set the key for Paris underworld life. Back of him was a long tradition, reaching back to the day of the lawless and gifted poet, Francois Villon, cut-purse and jailbird.

By Morris Gilbert

CHAPTER I

PARIS

A DAY in summer, radiant, golden, with a stir of brisk and cheerful animation on the boulevards of Paris. Up from the broad Place de la Concorde moves an endless stream of strollers, of cars and gaudy taxis, along the world-famous Avenue des Champs Elysees, to the top, where the noble Arch of Triumph hubs the Place of the Star . . .

Almost in the shadow of the Arch, close by the gay confusion of the avenue, there is a quiet street, a quiet house, a too quiet room. A woman, once beautiful, lies in the dusk behind the drawn curtains there. She will never see again the glorious vista of the Paris streets, never sip another cocktail in the discreet and luxurious bar she quitted half an hour earlier. She is dead.

Mysteries of Paris! A century ago, Eugene Sue—Edgar Wallace of his time and place—wrote a long novel by that name. It was a gruesome novel, filled to the brim with the macabre and the sinister. It was bloodthirsty, shocking. It painted a city where crime was vicious and cruel.

Centuries before that, another writer, Francois Villon, dwelt here and told of the life he loved and feared. He was a poet, and he sang of bawds and cut-purses, of the sinister "Court of Miracles," of violent knife-play in ill-lit streets, grim passions, brutal vice . . . Mysteries of Paris!

Times change—but Paris remains. There are parts of the city where a casual visitor today can easily imagine himself a contemporary of Villon. There are sections of Paris still redolent of the days of Sue. As for crime—that too changes; and remains.

The "Mysteries of Paris" are still, at times, vicious and cruel. Paris' gutters still run, now and then, with blood of people murdered. Gruesome problems confront the guardians of the law. Good citizens read, shuddering, what took place the night before in their beautiful capital.

TO understand the geography of crime here, take a map of the city. The famous hill of Montmartre rises along the northern rim of town. Splash that with red. It is the haunt of "the milieu"—the underworld of Paris.

Chalk-white domes and pinnacles of the modern basilica of the Sacred Heart surmount the very summit of Montmartre, sentinels of virtue above the sprawling metropolis. But below, in the shadow, vice mushrooms along the boulevards of Clichy, Rochechouart, and la Chapelle. It is sordid, shoddy, glittering with the barren glow of the big electrics that give a false illumination to the region.

Half the year these boulevards are crammed with carnival shows. All year round they house a collection of "hot spots." Here "La Pegre"—international crookdom—is a-prowl. The thoroughfares are brimming with the scourings of Europe, the Levant, and north Africa.

Prostitutes and "souteneurs," muscle-men and dips, gandy-men, shillabers, fronts, stooges, stools, coke-peddlers, "tatas," grifters, drifters and ordinary thugs range here. Here, from time to time, police throw out a relentless dragnet, a "rafle," just on the chance. The catch is sometimes astonishing.

Dotting these long arteries are certain squares—Place Clichy, Place Pigalle, Place Blanche, vortices of Parisian nightlife. Place Blanche! The very name trails an aspect of garish romance. The wings of the world-famous Moulin Rouge rise beside it, still, in a sort of unholy benediction.

The Rue Fontaine, where in recent boom-times American college youths took their summer extension-courses at the naughty old Zelli's, runs down hill from Place Blanche. Rue Lepic runs upward, meandering cow-path-like to the top of the hill. Beside the Moulin Rouge is Graff's, the bar that never closes, notable for the odd variety of its frequenters.

Place Pigalle is only less famous, with its Rat Mort and its Brasserie Alsacienne. The never-to-be-forgotten "Pig-Alley" of the American doughboy on leave.

AROUND this region, not so long ago, flourished that strange phenomenon, the Paris Apache.

He was a spectacular fellow, whose costume was as much a unifo.m as that other curiosity—the London Coster. The Apache hung out, with his girl friend, in the little "Bals Musettes"—dance places with accordion music.

He wore a "boule," a bun of hair like a Spanish bullfighter's, at the back of his head. "Favoris"—little spit-curls—were plastered to his temples below a broken-peaked cap. His trousers were velvet or corduroy and "elephant-legged," in the Parisian phrase. He wrapped a broad red sash around his waist, and crowned his trick appearance with a "foulard voyant," a bright scarf, about the neck.

Today, the Paris Apache is as dead as the dodo. Not a single lamp-post in the city serves any longer as background for this gent, chucking his girl about to minor adagio music. But his modern counterpart is just as tough, and better organized. Gangs flourish here. More and more they take on the manners of American mobdom.

Not quite so spectacular as the first modern Paris mob—the "Bande Bonnot" which flourished here just before the war—they are active and ruthless.

The difference between Paris mobs today and the Bonnot gang is that the Bonnot gang had principles. They were anarchists, fierce antagonists of society at large. They robbed and slaughtered with semi-religious conviction, and they spread terror through the city. Their names are still on the lips of every copper in the town.

Bonnot and his lieutenants, "Raymond la Science," Vallet, Monnier, Garnier, Soudy, Carouy, Metge, all came to bad ends. "Raymond la Science," Soudy, and Monnier finished with a public reception by "Monsieur Paris," the guillotine. This was for the assassination of two policemen. Vallet and Garnier fell at the barricade behind which they defied the police in their last round-up. Carouy took poison two hours after being condemned to death.

Metge died in the Guiana penal colony.

AS for Bonnot himself, his fate was the most spectacular of all. It took dynamite and a siege to destroy him.

Fleeing the police, he managed to get out of Paris and took refuge in a garage shed at Choisy-le-Roi on the road to Fontainebleau. There for a day he stood off a siege. Finally, they backed a hay-rig against the rear of the shed, with a charge of high explosive in the middle of it. The explosion set the shed afire and Bonnot fell in a fusillade of police bullets, in the assault that followed.

Rumor says that Bonnot was actually polished off afterward, as he lay wounded in an old hack transporting him to a hospital. French police are not always gentle.

Today three principal mobs operate in Paris. They are loose confederations, and since they have to have names, they call themselves the Marseilles gang, the Corsicans, and the Algerians—not that the names mean anything. Their purpose is the same as any other gang's in the world—to canalize or commercialize vice.

Traffic in women, traffic in drugs, traffic in stolen property or simple assault and concussion are their fields. They hi-jack the independent white-slavers, provide "fences" for stolen goods. They are "concussion artists," or thugs, and they do a little butchery when someone violates the "law of the milieu" by squealing to the cops, or for private reasons such as love or hate.

Montmartre! The word "martre" in French means: "the caterpillar of the tiger-moth." The "mont" or hill is well named!

BUT the map of Paris vice is not complete with Montmartre. Other stains of red are needed. For instance, in the luxurious quarter of the Champs Elysees.

Not long ago the "Gangsters of the Etoile" came into sudden notoriety following the Stavisky scandal and the death of Judge Albert Prince. They beat the rap that time, but the Etoile region wasn't whitewashed.

Three hundred yards north of the Etoile lies the Place des Ternes. "Terne" in French means dull, spiritless. It doesn't describe this place, which recently began to harbor a lot of mobsters.

Close by was Stavisky's temporarily ill-fated Empire Theater. Opposite it is the restaurant where he and his jackals ate. Stavisky-patroned bars and night clubs were thick here. One all-night cafe on the Place des Ternes occasionally shelters some pretty disreputable patrons and in another big one close by, mobsters staged a daylight stick-up in real American style not long ago. They didn't get away with it because their taxi stalled. But it was a sincere effort.

"Police problems in Chicago and in Paris?" remarks Principal Inspector Xavier Moreux of the Special (Detection) Brigade of the Police Judiciare. "They can't be compared. In each case there are special problems, growing out of the special circumstances of the city."

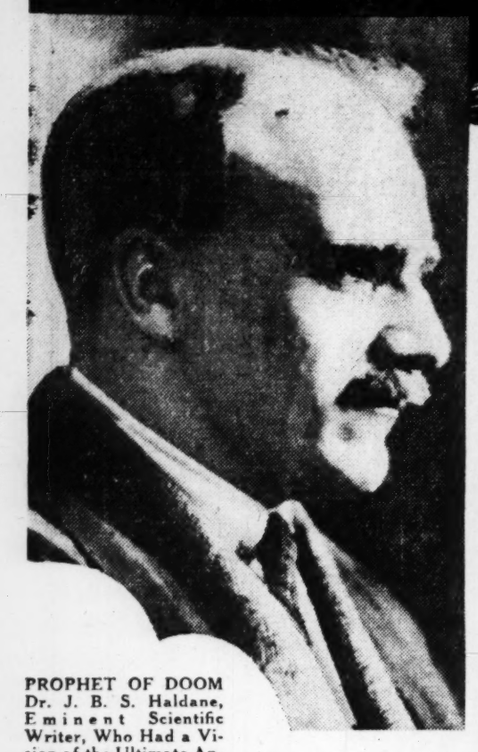

Principal Inspector Moreux is chief of staff to Divisional Commissioner Marcel Guillaume, through whose department pass all the big mysteries that confront Paris' police. They have been working together more than 20 years. In the matters of homicide and big theft, there isn't much that has occurred here since long before the war that they don't know about.

Revived Passamaquoddy Project Recalls J. B. S. Haldane's Famous Nightmare About Pulling the Moon Out of the Sky

PROPHET OF DOOM
Dr. J. B. S. Haldane, Eminent Scientific Writer, Who Had a Vision of the Ultimate Annihilation of Mankind Because They Succeeded in Harnessing the Tides.

FAMOUS PROPHECIES OF THE WORLD'S END

New Year's Day of 1000 A. D. was a period of terror for medieval Europe, which expected the "millenium."

The Millerite scare of April 23, 1843, when thousands climbed hills and awaited doom, is equally famous.

Professor Albert Porta, California sun-spot mathematician, caused a ruffle by predicting the "greatest storm of history" for December 17, 1920.

Robert Reidt, of Long Island, sat on his roof all the night of February 6, 1925, awaiting an end that didn't come.

Wilbur Glenn Voliva's prophecies for September 10, 1934, and several earlier dates, fell as flat as his theory of the earth's shape.

Our planet is still here.

MUCH has been written of man's reckless wastefulness of the natural resources of the earth. Many uneasy predictions — some of which might yet prove true—have been made about the serious inconveniences or tragic fate that might in the remote future befall mankind because of this short-sighted extravagance. What, scientists have asked, will be substituted for fuel supplies when the oil and other mineral resources of the globe are exhausted?

One answer to the hypothetical question is already being found up in Eastport, Maine, where the government, after all these years, proposes to make a reality the long contemplated project to harness the tides in Passamaquoddy Bay, the American spur of the Bay of Fundy. In fact, Public Work's officials only lately approved a $30,000,000 Federal allotment to construct the long discussed Passamaquoddy power project, as it has come to be known.

In the Bay of Fundy, the tides rise and fall 24 feet twice each day. An almost unbelievable amount of power would be placed on tap with these mighty tides harnessed. Engineers estimate that the Passamaquoddy project alone, upon completion, will become the future source of electric heating, lighting and motive power for Maine, all of New England and, possibly, New York. It will be the first project of its kind, on a large scale, though a few experimental tide-machines have been built — and worked.

Thus, with the tides harnessed, one might think, man will have succeeded in finding the all-time antidote for his wastefulness of coal, lumber and oil. As the supplies of natural resources diminish, it might be pointed out, it will be easy to supplement them with the erection of more tide-power plants. Certainly, then—harness the tides from coast to coast!

And man, with customary enthusiasm, will undoubtedly forge rapidly ahead with plans to fill the world with tide-power plants. When the Passamaquoddy project is proved practicable, others will begin to spring up in the east and west, south and north. It is not hard to believe that in the course of thousands of years the globe will be dotted with them.

However, science now steps in, with a nightmarish theory which attaches a dire significance to thoughts of a planet covered with a network of tide-power stations. Out of the not-too-distant past—1927, to be exact—looms recollection of a little "book of doom" conceived by that master-scientist, J. B. S. Haldane, and now a Harper curio. "The Last Judgment," it was entitled, significantly.

Those who read it were impressed, for the moment, with the perfectly logical scientific analysis of the cause for the end of life on earth, as fancifully predicted by Haldane. The eminent scientist, you see, had visualized a world calamity—and traced it directly to a world-wide harnessing of the tides!

It certainly sounded like a hideous nightmare. A cock-eyed pipedream, many called it. Still, Haldane's speculations were so scientifically exact. . . . He reminded us that the rise and fall of the tides are governed by the moon . . . regulated by that orbit's gravitational pull.

And if the tides are completely harnessed by thousands upon thousands of heavy-load tide-power stations — well, why wouldn't it be possible in time for the moon to be pulled right out of the sky?

Of course, even the way Haldane described the ultimate disaster, it's all infinitely remote—millions of years away. And he also took the pains to point out that the vast majority of mankind contemplate the death of the whole human species with less aversion than their own individual ends. In this way, he accounts for the reason nothing was ever done, in his prophecy, to counteract the effect the tide-machines had on the moon, until it was too late.

He pretended to be writing, from the nearby planet Venus, an account of the end of life on Earth, about 25,000,000 A. D.

"As tide engines were developed," he wrote, "an ever increasing use was made of their power, and before the human race had been in existence for a million years, the tide power utilized aggregated a million million horse power. The braking action of the tides was increased fifty-fold and the day began to lengthen appreciably."

Underlying this is the well-known principle that the moon, pulling back on the earth, really holds its rotation in check. But for dragging the moon around its orbit, the earth would whirl faster. Conversely, he reasoned, an additional power-load put on the moon would slow the earth's rotation down.

As the tide-power projects piled up in Haldane's imagination, such a tremendous pull was generated on the moon that the earth's days gradually began to grow longer. Within a few million years or so, each day was a week long. Then it was a month long—and the first thing you know, the moon stood still in the sky and grew so large, as it approached the earth slowly, that it occupied an area estimated at one-twentieth of the space in the visible heavens!

By the time the year 25,000,000 had rolled around, according to the scientist's pipe-dream, the earth was revolving so slowly that there were only seven and one-half days in the year. The long nights were intensely cold, and the days exceedingly hot.

"The human race somewhat diminished in numbers," he wrote, "but there was still an immense demand for power for heating and cooling purposes. The tides raised by the sun, although they only occurred fifteen times per year, were used for these ends, and the day was thus still further lengthened. . . . The moon now began once more to move relative to the earth, but in the opposite direction, rising in the west and setting in the east."

It was not until the year 36,000,000, according to Haldane's prediction, that complete disaster became imminent. The moon itself began to disintegrate, so great had become the strain of the constant pull created by the tide engines! There were severe earthquakes on earth. Giant landslips were observed in the lunar mountains, and cracks occasionally opened its surfaces.

"The end came quite suddenly," Haldane predicted in his amazing dream. "The depression in the moon's surface facing the earth suddenly opened and emitted a torrent of white-hot lava. As the moon passed round the earth it raised the temperature in the tropics to such an extent that rivers and lakes were dried up and vegetation destroyed. . . . Within three days the satellite had broken up into a ring of white-hot lava and dust. . . ."

Now let's take a look at plans for the first of the giant tide-power plants which, when erected in the Bay of Fundy, will probably be the forerunner of many others within the next century or so. Tide-power, by the way, is nothing new; there are at the present time small tide-mills in operation in various parts of the country.

However, the Passamaquoddy project is something new, since nothing like it on such a gigantic scale has been attempted before. The proposed tide engines that are contemplated being installed are known as aero-tidal power systems. One unit consists of three square air tanks with open bottoms, each connected with a single air line to a pneumatic motor in one power house for all three.

Each air line is valve controlled at the powerhouse, either to be closed, to admit outcoming air undershot to the motor, and ingoing air overshot through the motor. Each tank is held on a girder skeleton which is anchored to a concrete base in a soil site or to the rocks of some rocky site. And the bottom of each is at low water level, and the top at high water level. The height of the tank depends upon the rise and fall of the tide. Where the rise and fall is only six feet, only a six foot tank is needed. But where the rise and fall is twenty-four feet, as in the Bay of Fundy, twenty-four foot tanks will be required.

The amount of power obtained by a unit is in ratio to the number of square feet covered by the tanks and the total rise and fall of the tide. The Passamaquoddy power-house will be built to develop some 500,000 or 700,000 horsepower. At least two engineering companies have drawn elaborate and detailed plans, involving dams, floats, and dynamos driven by the floats—one of which the PWA authorities will either adopt or modify.

These same engineers have it all figured out that the entire mechanism will have an allotted lifetime of twenty-five years, and that the power production cost would amount to the amazingly small figure of $2,000 annually.

Why was the Bay of Fundy chosen as the site for this project? Well, for the simple reason that at no seaport along the Atlantic Ocean do tides reach such noticeable extremes as at Eastport, Maine, which also has the distinction of being the most easterly city in the United States. At some times of the year the tides have an even greater rise and fall than their customary twenty-four feet, and rush in to overflow the wharves.

Meanwhile it is a scientific truth that the effect of the power plant at Passamaquoddy will actually slow down the rotation of the earth—perhaps one-tenth of a second a century. That's nothing to worry about, of course. But then, say, a similar gigantic project harnesses the tides in the Bering Sea. Ah, the earth begins to slow up one-fifth of a second every century, now!

Very well, consider thousands of other tide engines being installed all over the world, add the total of the one-tenth seconds they each slow up the earth's rotation and, like Haldane, try to visualize what will begin to happen—in perhaps 25,000,000 years!

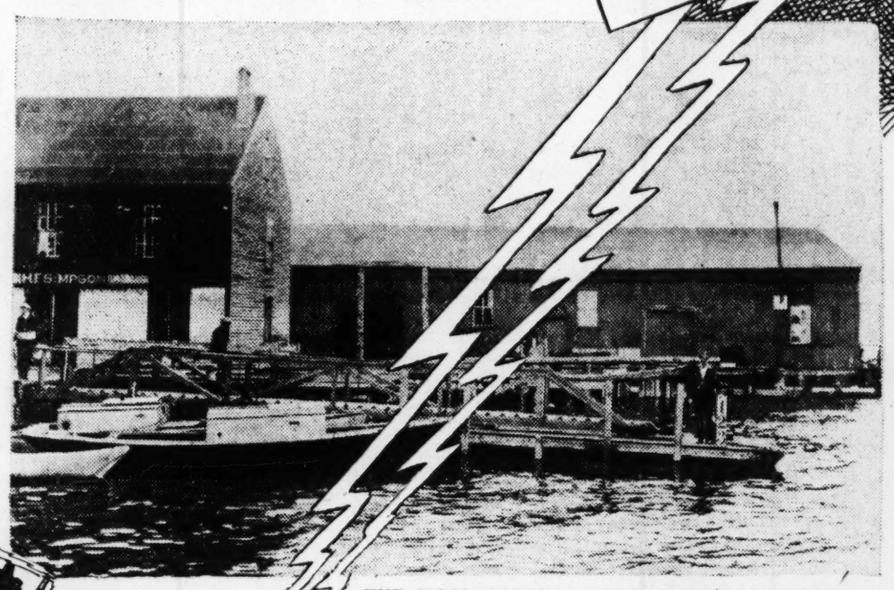

Of course, you say, if the tidal power-houses really began to throw the planetary system out of kilter, the astronomers would promptly warn us. The tide machines would be destroyed. But would that be the case, actually? Maybe by the year 1,000,000 people might welcome a longer day. Perhaps the scientists then would feel that they were far enough advanced to control even the planetary system to suit the needs of the world.

Nevertheless, it is quite obvious that it will take many tide machines and millions of years to even begin to invite lunar disaster. And Haldane spoke truthfully when he stated in his "The Last Judgment":

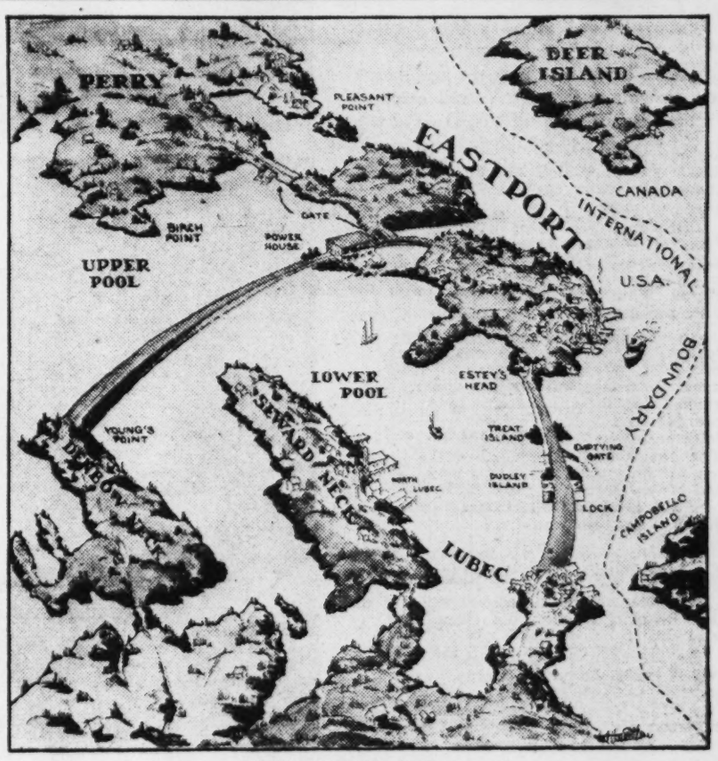

". . . The human race on earth was never greatly influenced by an envisaged future. . . ."

When the Duke and the Pawnbroker Dickered over the Diamonds

His Grace Needed Cash; a Money-Lender Got the Gems; the Deal Was Okay, But—Then Came That Annoying Law Suit of the 2 Ghosts

The Maternal Duchess of Manchester, Nee Consuelo Yznaga del Valle. She Deplored Her Son's Squandering. Above, at Right, The Second Duchess of Manchester, Nee Kathleen Dawes. She Was on the Stage; "Kim" Adored Her, and—

Over the deal counter bends the proprietor—lean, mean, hugely professional and at the moment intent upon a sprawling swirl of baubles spread out before him. Focusing-glass screwed into his eye, he is appraising the approximate worth of the jewels which his client has offered him.

The client is a jovial, odd-looking chap. Snowy-haired. Apple-cheeked. Urbane of manner. But quite apprehensive. Putting it bluntly, he needs some money. And he—the faintly notorious Duke of Manchester—hopes the pawnbroker won't dicker too long over the the diamonds.

But the pawnbroker seems (my word!) to be taking an unconscionable time about the business. Finally—and is His Grace relieved!—he unscrews his focusing-glass; nods his approval and assent, and says in purest Cockney:

"Raighto! Six hundred and fifty pounds satisfactory? Good. Good. Here y'are, Sir." "Thank you too much," murmurs the Duke, and proceeds to scram.

No sir! This fact has never occurred to him. But then neither does he suspect that, two years later, this same ducal personage will be ignominously yanked before a London magistrate, charged with "obtaining money under false pretenses." The detailed charge: That the Duke had swindled one Walter Matthew Lawlor (His Pawnship) and his colleague, Thomas Miller Sutton, out of about $3,250, as those soquaint Americans would put it. . . .

THE suit to recover steep damages from the Duke of Manchester for "pledging" his mother's gems on that historic occasion was, legally, a most curious one.

The accusation against him was lodged, metaphorically speaking, by two corpses; for both Lawlor and Sutton died before they could press their action in person.

Instead, the charge was brought by their heirs, who solemnly alleged that His Grace ("Kim" to his palsies) never owned the disputed diamonds at all, but that they were really the property of the general trustees under the terms of his mother's will.

Gay Gags and Wistful Wisecracks Of The Duke Who Owes Everybody

"THE only trouble with me is that I've always been a mug.

"It's my nature to be too trustful and eager to help others.

"I felt that New York was an oyster I could easily open to my own advantage. But I fancy I lacked the proper fork.

"Ah me, I was big, strong and full of pep—then.

"I saw myself getting into the rut of a jaded society butterfly. I was bored, oh fearfully.

"I've been so broke, at one time or another, that I've barely been able to pay my valet. Fancy!

"But if I'd had as much money as a duke should, I'd nave weighed 250 pounds and died of apoplexy. Oh I say!

"A chap can't always pay his bills. Look at the depression!"

The maternal Duchess of Manchester had died in 1909. She was the former Consuelo Yznaga del Valle, of Ravenswood, Indiana, and Santiago de Cuba—an overpoweringly beautiful belle, and rich (but how!) in her own right.

When the old Duke married Consuelo, there was quite a bit of tut-tutting among the more rigidly conservative element of the Manchester clan. But this was as nothing compared to the heavy deploring that was done by this same Consuelo on the many occasions when her eldest and most graceless son came to grief during his scandal-speckled youth.

He was always a nice boy, but considered "fast," in the phrase of the period. A list of his picturesque mishaps would consume columns of print. For the social historian we append a series of hand-picked items.

"The Bad Boy of the House of Lords"—the absolute top in the British aristocracy—"Kim," in short, was always in gossip's hot water. Never more so than when, as a mere broth of a lad, he came into the title. He was only 15 at the time—today he's 58—but he lost no leisure in becoming the most cultivated wastrel of the Victorian era.

How the Duke spent and spent! Had he been of graver stuff, he might have settled down to the management of his vast estates—Kimbolton Castle, where Catherine of Aragon died; Tanerage Castle, in Ireland; a stately town house in London's azure-veined Portman Square, and 27,000 acres of land here and there.

Nothing, however, could have been further from His Grace's thoughts than so repulsive a stewardship. What, me a landlord? he ejaculated in effect and proceeded to have himself a swell time. Leaving behind him a mere barrelful of unpaid bills, the youth set sail for the States, seeking adventure, romance and a fortune.

He got all three, but they proved fragile blessings.

For adventure, he went actor. Through the kind agencies of a booking office he got a very microscopic job in one of the late Charles Frohman's companies. But he wasn't histrionically so hot; the work bored him, and he quit.

For romance, there was the exquisite Helena Zimmerman. Miss Zimmerman was the daughter of Eugene Zimmerman, the Cincinnati railway czar. His personal wealth was set at $10,000,000, and Helena was the catch of the season.

Manchester met her while he was taking a brief fling at newspaper work. At first His Grace's high-pressure self-salesmanship yielded negative results. But a year later in Paris, on the eve of her sailing for America, his pleas were so caloric that the dazzled Miss Z missed her boat and won a husband.

Their married life was crammed with the oddest of episodes. The brand-new Duchess was addicted to Oriental mysticism, and, what was even more staggering in those days, was a member of the Socialist Party, my dear. (Votes for women in that musty era were regarded as a sheer fantasy if not an actual indecency.)

As for her mercurial spouse, he was going places and doing things (and people) in characteristic fashion. He gave himself wholeheartedly to athletics, winning the pretty title of "The Blueblood Sampson." He studied medicine. He cultivated the social amenities of the Leicester Square cabbies, who worshiped him for his democracy and because in their joint lunch-wagon tiffins he handled his fork with such ducal grace.

He headed a nursing home romantically known as "Love's Abode," but the police had another name for this curious sanitarium. According to them, the institution, at Islesworth, was presided over by a quack doctor; and it catered almost exclusively to pampered musical comedy actresses, whose health appeared to be perfect.

Meanwhile the young Duchess was "scorching" on her bicycle, swinging a mean niblick on the links and burying her eight pet dogs in silk-lined rosewood coffins to an obligato of tears.

Both the Manchester and Zimmerman families had been furious when Helena married the Duke. The railroad magnate, storming, announced that the bridegroom would never touch a cent of his money. The rich old Dowager Duchess was equally outraged and cut the Duke off without even the proverbial shilling.

Their ability to detect rocks ahead in the couple's romance would have done credit to a deep-sea lookout. After their fourth child was born, Helena and "Kim" began to be "incompatible." The duke's wild oats were still sprouting vigorously, and one particularly charming oat—Miss Portia Knight, an American actress—showed every symptom of turning into a cactus.

Good old "Kim," impetuous as ever, had dragged Portia from a convent, to which she had repaired to scrutinize the state of her soul. Evidently his abruptness jarred her spirituality considerably, for she sued him for breach of promise.

The Duke also had fractured society's proprieties by appearing at a staid ball wearing what the horrified editorial writers referred to as "a very scanty bathing suit," though in it he really resembled Johnny Weissmuller in a Mother Hubbard.

The advent of the World War gave "Kim" an excuse for rushing to battle, and a jolly good thing, too, for the countryside was liberally plastered with his worthless bank accounts and bum checks and paralytic promissory notes.

Regardless of their country's needs, inhuman process servers waited at the dock to nab "Kim" as he embarked for France, but he fooled them and got away. Needless to say, he served at the front with conspicuous gallantry as an aviator. He was still bankrupt, but apparently immune from bombs.

By the time the Duchess's father died in 1914, the Manchesters had separated. It was not till 1925, however, that he sued for absolute divorce. For some reason six years passed before the final decree was awarded—to the Duchess!

This left ever-loving "Kim" free to marry again. Promptly he did so. In 1931 he became the husband of Miss Kathleen Dawes, a retired British actress. Although enraged people all over the globe persisted in suing "Kim" for this and that, things were definitely looking up for him.

For one thing, the Duke's mother, who died in 1909, had left him a cool million, although the disagreeable old courts tied up the fortune till 1933. In that year they relented, and "Kim" breathed easier. . . .

But Fate or something equally unpleasant had decreed that his woes were by no means over. Came the incident of the pawned diamonds, the litigious ghosts of Their Pawnships—and a wringing of hands and a gnashing of molars from the Duke's direction.

The only consolation William Angus Drogo Montagu, etc., can bask in is that when you've been in hot water all your life you develop a gratifyingly insensitive hide.

A general insensitivity, however, may go and frequently does go with indecisiveness about personal decisions and a pronounced feeling of inferiority.

The Duke's total inability to get to first base about his divorce from the beautiful Helena is a case in point. While he went through the preliminary motions by first making feeble efforts to get a "partial" French decree, it is significant that it was the Duchess who finally saw the thing through.

Almost every episode in "Kim's" wildly checkered career testifies to the fact that he hoped he was just as good as the next fellow, if not a shade better. This is a bad sign of a camouflaged humility.

Consider. He tried his hand at producing movies. Great grief, how the money ran out! He was successively theatre manager, airplane corporation director, truck manufacturer. Still no financial dice.

Then he took up the exploring business. "Kim" was shipwrecked in the Caribbean Sea, was nearly captured by Chinese pirates, was the honor guest of Indian princes, went around the globe.

It is unofficially recorded of him that once he very timidly got in on a poker game with the late John Jacob Astor, William K. Vanderbilt and other monied big shots. But greatly to his surprise he discovered that the ante was 25 cents! Again he won $19,000—between dances—when he thought the total stake was $100.

The eccentric strain in the Manchesters is apparently hereditary. Or, at any rate, "Kim's" son, the very personable Lord Edward Montagu, has shared his dad's hot water from time to time.

Such is "Kim," a fantastic and pathetic man. But one who in future will shout "Gimme!" to the world's moneylenders in vain. They know him.

WILL JUSTICE TRIUMPH?

Police Say the Largest Cash Robbery Is Solved in Crime Ring Roundup

By PETER LEVINS.

ON a pleasant August morning a shabbily dressed man, wearing a white apron, trundled a small, three-wheeled pushcart down Bay 19th street, Brooklyn, and stopped at the wooden loading "bridge" outside the Rubel Ice Company plant. As the pushcart contained some burlap bags, one might have assumed that he was an itinerant ice cream peddler, or retail ice dealer, come for his day's supply of ice. He arrived on the scene shortly after 9 o'clock.

Children played about the street and the loading platform. Housewives from the block of six houses adjoining the plant busied themselves with their morning chores. Across the street, at the Bay 19th street tennis courts, several agile youngsters were trying out their strokes under the eye of Mrs. Carolyn Bannister, the tennis professional who operated the courts. Other peddlers and tradesmen arrived, got their supply of ice, and moved on.

But the shabby, unshaven fellow in the white apron remained.

After a while another man wandered onto the scene, a burly fellow who seemed to have nothing better to do with his time than to lie on the grass bordering the wire fence and watch the tennis players. Several times when a ball bounced into the street he retrieved it and tossed it back.

Armoured Truck Arrives At 12:35.

The sun climbed higher. Trucks pulled up to the loading platform, got their ice, and drove away. A moving van stopped in front of one of the dwellings and began to disgorge its load of household effects. As 12 o'clock approached the housewives retired to their kitchens to prepare the noontime meal. And still the aproned peddler lolled by his cart, and the other man watched the tennis players.

Then, at 12:35 an armored truck of the United States Trucking Corporation rolled down the street toward the ice plant. The car had made the rounds of seven Brooklyn branch banks of the Bank of Manhattan Co. and had also picked up currency from small concerns and from other Rubel plants. It contained at this moment more than $450,000 in cash, old bills of from $1 to $500 denominations, and a treasure in silver.

This was a Tuesday (August 21, 1934), and Tuesday is one of the busiest collection days of the week. This particular truck's cargo was about average for the time of day.

The crew of the bullet-proof machine consisted of the driver, Joseph Allen; the conductor, William Lilienthal, and the guard, John Wilson. Allen sat in the front behind a bullet-proof window; the others were in the rear compartment, with the 35 bags of money.

Driver Allen looked through the glass and saw nothing unusual, the same old familiar scene, children playing, mothers shouting for their young, men on the platform waiting for the ice to come down the chutes, tennis players leaping about and a peddler pushing his cart toward the armored truck.

The truck stopped next to the pushcart. Lilienthal climbed from the rear into the driver's compartment, opened the door toward the Rubel plant and stepped toward the office, where he was to receive $450 cash, and Guard Wilson was stepping out of the truck, hand on his gun, when things began to happen with speed and precision of a perfectly stage or movie scene.

The white-aproned peddler threw back his burlap sacks and seized one of two sub-machine guns lying in the bottom of the pushcart. The burly man who had been watching the tennis players grabbed the other gun. Simultaneously a group of armed men, estimated at about eight, jumped out of three cars parked behind the truck. Several carried machine guns, the others pistols.

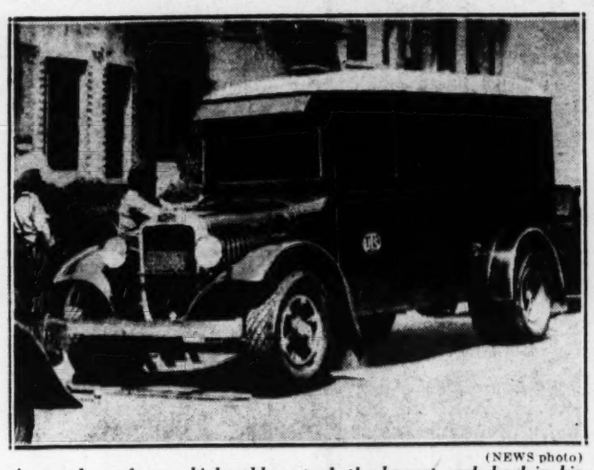

Wilson, Allen and Lilienthal were caught completely by surprise. Ordinarily one of the truck crew would have been able to close the door and the money would have been safe, but in this instance, so perfect had been all the arrangement., it was impossible. No sooner had the door been opened than the aproned thug had Wilson and Allen covered.

* * *

The truck crew was disarmed and forced to crawl under the loading platform. One of the stickup gang stepped into the office and ripped a telephone from its connections. Another lined up the freightened loaders. Meanwhile the tennis players shouted and skipped about the courts oblivious of the swift drama taking place in the street.

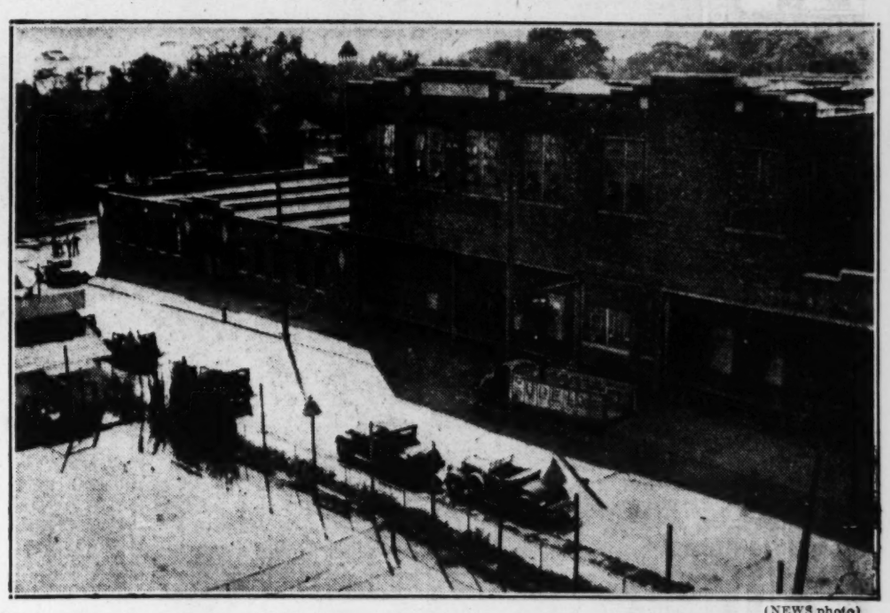

Next, three of the mob boarded the truck and began to pass out the canvas money bags. They were loaded into a large Lincoln sedan, the back seat of which had been removed to make room for the loot. While this operation was in progress, William Kelly, a war veteran, employed by Mrs. Bannister, looked up from the work he was doing on her car. Then he stepped over to the wire fence and said, "Get down—lie down! There's a holdup at the ice plant!"

A moment later the leader of the mob yelled, "Scram!" the three men in the truck leaped out, and all dashed for the three cars. They had transferred 13 bags, and 22 remained. But they had chosen well—the bags they took contained $427,950, and the bags they left behind contained only $29,000, mostly in silver.

Where one of the most expert holdup jobs of modern times took place, Aug. 21, 1934. Armored car pulled up in front of office, where ice truck stands in picture. Players on tennis court (foreground) remained ignorant of the drama until robbers were ready to leave. Bandit cars fled to Cropsey Ave. (left) and soon outdistanced the truck.

Truck Crew Lumber Off in Pursuit.

As the three cars fled, Wilson, Allen and Lilienthal scrambled out from under the loading platform. (Incidentally, only eight minutes had passed since the truck pulled up in front of the plant.) They grabbed a machine gun the bandits had left behind in their haste, leaped into the truck, and lumbered off in pursuit.

But the heavy truck was no match for the robbers' cars. The sedan carrying the swag sped west toward Cropsey avenue and Graves-end Bay, a block and a half from the ice plant. Lilienthal opened fire but without effect. The gunmen's car, which someone noticed, bore the license 1L-5075, roared by the Bath beach playground of the Children's Aid Society and soon was lost to sight.

Within a few minutes the community was congested with police cars. The audacity and efficiency of the job—the largest cash holdup in history—stunned authorities. Every available detective in Brooklyn was rushed to the scene, cars patroled the main highways, sharpshooters covered all the bridges leading into Manhattan.

But it was not until an hour after the robbery that a clue was discovered—and a discouraging clue it was at best. The Lincoln sedan was found abandoned at the foot of Bay 35th street, less than half a mile from the ice plant, in the opposite direction from which it had taken flight. Apparently the robbers had dared to double back on their tracks.

Witnesses had seen three men, one of them in the uniform of a chauffeur, haul two big white canvas bags out of the sedan and drop them into one of two fast boats which had been cruising close to shore all morning. Two of the strangers had gotten into the boats with the bags, while the man in uniform had driven the car back toward Cropsey avenue, about 100 feet, then rejoined his companions, and the two boats had streaked off at high speed across Graves-end bay.

So this was how they had escaped the police cordon.

Two police planes took off from Floyd Bennett field. Police boats scoured the waters surrounding New York. But the day drew to an end without a trace of the robbers being found. The police had vague descriptions of the criminals, as well as descriptions of the cars they had used, and the two boats. But these details didn't seem to help, and the license on the Lincoln led nowhere, for the plates had been stolen.

Though only three of the gang had been seen getting into the boats, police believed that the others had been picked up at some deserted spot along the beach. They declared that in their opinion the job had been pulled by a gang of former rum runners, led by a master mind of the underworld whose racket had been ruined by repeal.

The trucking company hired the William J. Burns and Pinkerton detective agencies, who immediately launched independent investigations. The day after the crime the company sent checks totaling $427,950 to the banks and other places where the truck had collected the money. The company was able to pay the huge sum promptly, for the entire loss was covered by insurance. (Each of the armored cars is insured for $8,000,000.)

What seemed a minor clue turned up in Keansburg, N. J., when Police Chief Charles McGuire reported the finding on a money bag on the beach. It was marked "Return to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York." However, Inspector John J. Sullivan, in charge of the investigation, insisted that only the bags containing the silver had been so marked, and none of the bags of silver had been touched.

Scuttled Speedboat Examined for Clues.

Two days after the robbery police raised a scuttled Gar Wood speedboat at Arvene, on Jamaica bay, but if this was one of the getaway vessels it yielded no clues. The machine gun left at the scene was fruitlessly traced to a Wisconsin retailer. On August 27 another money bag similar to the one found on the beach at Keansburg, was found on a Duxbury, Mass., roadside.

Police, private detectives and Department of Justice agents worked behind a screen of secrecy, but the days and weeks passed and there were no arrests.

Then, on November 20, the authorities reported that Thomas Quinn, of West 53rd street, Manhattan, alleged owner of the boats used in the getaway, had been taken into custody and was being held as a material witness. No details were divulged, but the headlines said, "Super - Holdup Solved, Police Hot After 12," and "Police Closing in on $427,000 Gang." It was said that 62 picked detectives had been engaged in the man hunt, which was costing $100,000.

Late in November it became known that all three members of the truck crew were no longer in the employ of the trucking company. Wilson had quit, and the other two said they had been fired. The company insisted that they had quit when they refused to work in the company garage.

Came the new year. Quinn was still held, getting $3 a day as a material witness. Then, on January 23, there was another expert robbery, this time in Fall River, Massachusetts.

A pay roll shipment of $129,000, bound for the B. C. M. Durfee Bank & Trust Co., of Fall River, arrived on the 8:13 a. m. train from Boston. The money, in coin and small bills, was sent by registered mail and was picked up at the railroad station by a light United States mail delivery truck, driven by Herbert B. Reid. There was no guard on the truck.

Reid was driving up French hill with his bags of mail when two armed men stopped him and forced him to turn down a side street, where two other men were waiting. The gang forced Reid to enter a Plymouth sedan, transferred the mail bags to their own car, then drove away with their captive. While one of the gang sorted out the mail, another bound Reid's arms, legs, eyes and mouth with adhesive tape.

The postal authorities were flabbergasted by this daylight robbery. No mob had ever before dared to stick up a United States mail truck in New England. And this was the sweetest haul in New England history.

A Suspect Is Grabbed But Jumps Bail.

In the ensuing strenuous investigation under Chief Postal Inspector John J. Breslin, in charge of the New England district, all developments were kept secret but the federal men presently began to struggle out of the darkness.

The New York police picked up a suspect on March 31 when they arrested a West Side hoodlum with the beautiful name of Sonny McGlone. It was not the first time Sonny had been a suspect in important crimes, for he had been questioned in the machine gun assassination of Frankie Dunn, a Hoboken, N. J., beer baron, and also in the celebrated Hotsy-Totsy Club murders in New York.

McGlone's name was not mentioned in connection with the Brooklyn or Fall River jobs but with the $10,000 robbery of an armoured car in Perth Amboy, N. J., on September 19. As soon as he won his release on bail he disappeared.

* * *

The investigation abruptly leaped from behind its curtain of secrecy on April 27 when federal officers and police of Providence, R. I., staged five raids and arrested 15 suspects. Later a dozen more were seized in various cities. It was said that the first tip to the gang, one of the best organized in recent years, had come from Herbert Horenstein, alias Harris, arrested in Los Angeles after a stolen $20 bill had been traced to him there.

Police action was also hastened by the ride murder of Andino Merola, a member of the gang, whose body was found on the 26th in a parked automobile in Wrentham, Mass. The investigators are not talking about this angle but it is possible that Merola had informed on the gang and died a squealer's death.

The most important raid was at the old Colonel Felix R. Wendelschaefer mansion at Warwick, a few miles from Providence. A one-time headquarters for rum-runners, a veritable fortress commanding a view of the countryside and easily accessible to the Atlantic, the police charged that this mansion had been the headquarters of the "million-dollar mob" which had pulled the Fall River job, the Brooklyn robbery, the Butler, Pa., robbery last year, and many other crimes, including kidnapings and murders.

Officers and relief workers digging in the labyrinthian cellars of the house uncovered an arsenal, thousand of dollars from the Fall River haul, quantities of stolen jewelry, and what appeared to be human bones.

Police arrested the elderly Emil Rettich, who was living on the estate, and issued warrants for Carl Rettich, a Providence public enemy, called the master mind of the "crime factory." Rettich later surrendered in New York and was held in Providence, with various others, for a preliminary hearing next Tuesday. The authorities have been questioning him about many unsolved crimes and mysteries, including the dissapearance of Danny Walsh, a Providence racketeer kidnaped two years ago. Walsh's family had fruitlessly paid $40,000 for his release.

On May 1, Sonny McGlone was trapped in Manhattan and held with others arrested in this region for a hearing May 17. The police charge that he participated in the Fall River, Brooklyn and Perth Amboy stickups. Postal Inspector Frank Shea announced in New York his thorough conviction that the arrest of McGlone completed the solution of the armored car robbery at the ice plant.

"McGlone," said Acting Captain Daniel Curtayne in the lineup the next morning, "perhaps you don't know that somebody has squealed. I'm telling you that you're going to burn when they get you up there at Fall River." But Sonny had heard such horrendous prophecies before and did not seem in the least disturbed. He is a product of the tough west side, and is schooled in the debonair front.

Meanwhile there has been considerable evidence of agitation in the underworld because of this wholesale roundup. Criminal havens are being deserted, for there seems to be no doubt that there has been a squeal, perhaps a whole series of squeals. Just what the information is, the police and federal men are not disclosing.

Befort Rettich was arraigned in Providence on May 2, it is reported that five New York gunmen had arrived to kill him. He had to be arraigned secretly. He and his fellow suspects will again be on the spot at their preliminary hearings. Instead, life will be very uncertain for all the witnesses and defendants in this case until the last prisoner is put away.

TWO WEDDINGS

By JOSEPH A. LOEWINSOHN

NOT long ago, in response to an invitation, I attended a Jewish wedding. Frankly, I never was much of a hand to enjoy such ever-occurring events as weddings, anniversaries, birthday parties, bar mitzvahs, brithmillahs and funerals, but this time, in view of certain circumstances, I had to acquiesce.

Walking toward the house in which the happy event was to take place, I fell into a mediative mood. Spring, you see, always affects me that way, and lofty thoughts wandered through my mind. How utterly futile and vain was our earthly existence, I mused, and how unpredictable and mysterious were the ways of life!

The words of Marmus Aurelius, that wise Roman emperor-philosopher of antiquity, stood clearly in my memory: "The extent of human life is but a point; its substance is in perpetual flux, its perceptions dim, and the whole composition of the body tending to corruption. The souil is but a whirl, fortune not to be guessed at and fame undiscerning—in a word, that which belongs to the body is a flowing river, and what the soul has is but dream and bubble."

That night I was to witness a fusion of two young lives, sanctified by the age-old Jewish rites, and I knew that in their passionate, uncontrollable desire to become one, they shall unconsciously obey the wise laws of nature to create a new life. The inexorable process of perpetuating the human race was to go on, the NRA notwithstanding.

Having seen, however, how sadly end sometimes pompous and eulogized weddings, even though the happy and smiling faces of the couple might indicate the future connubial happiness, my heart was heavy. I knew that every wedlock was a grand lottery in which the fickle goddess of chance played an important part.

Thinking along these lugubrious lines, I finally reached my destination. Even from a distance I could see through the brightly illuminated windows the animated gusts, and my ears discerned strains of music played by the piano and violin. Ah, how incredibly beautiful can even a simple melody sound in the fragrant stillness of a spring evening!

Inside, the modest dwelling was uncomfortably warm from the presence of far too many people. Those present did not constitute what is generally referred to as "society," although such petty bourgeois gatherings often surpass in color and gayety, brilliant assemblages of supercilious aristocracy. These humble people behave perfectly natural and without the slightest pretense for superiority and noxious display of hauteur.

Upon entering the modest front room, I modestly parked myself near the wall and began to observe the scene. The bridegroom's mother, a woman of ample proportions, was frantically rushing from one room to another. She had a corsage of beautiful roses pinned to her very loose gown. The father of the groom looked stern and sullen, and his bearded face was impregnable to observations. It was impossible to determine whether he was glad or otherwise. It seemed, upon a closer scrutiny, that he was not feeling so hot, to use the popular street vernacular, for the wedding, the bountiful supper with drinks, orchestra and other incidental expenses were all to be charged to him. With the depression still lingering, this was rather prohibitive pleasure.

In the two adjacent rooms were set long tables which fairly groaned with the weight of edibles. Traditional Jewish dishes were in abundant evidence; the ubiquitous gefilte fish, potato salad, dill pickles, ladkes, sandwiches with salami, spiced beef and appetizing kosher wurst, apple shtrudel, all sorts of cakes and cookies and fruit. Corn liquor was served in the innocent looking soft drink bottles and the odd-shaped decanters contained home-made wine.

In the farther room, clustered about the table, sat a few men with hats on. They had arrived early enough to occupy the most strategic positions, near the water front, as it were. With longing glances and perceptible impatience they were surveying the marvelous gastronomic collection.

The bride, becomingly attired in a light spring coat and a becoming hat with a short veil, was surrounded by a ring of female friends. They were counselling her, at the same time excitedly voicing admiration for her bridal finery. The younger set was amusing itself, and the air vibrated with music and the rhythmic stamp of dancing feet.

There was another wedding on that day and the rabbi arrived after considerable delay. The father of the bride respectfully escorted the rabbi into the parlor, solicitously guarding the reverend gentleman against the children who were romping and darting in and out of the room. New guests continued to arrive and soon the place became so packed with humanity that one had to wriggle his way out in order to get from one room to another, especially when particularly buxom matrons barricaded the way.

Four young men held up the canopy under which stood the bride, tremulously anticipating the wedding ceremony. Presently, the two obliging young fellows brought the groom who took his place beside the bride, the aspiring "chossen" looked very pale and his black eyes betrayed nervousness bordering on fear. Everything went smoothly, however, and when, in conformity with the ancient Jewish tradition, bits of glass were crushed under the young couple's feet, the guests broke into a joyous pandemonium. Old and young linked their hands and formed a whirling circle around the newlyweds, swaying in a joyous dance, shouting and singing ifn ecstatic abandon. Vociferous congratulations

"The Story of the Bible Told in Pictures"

From "Icones Biblicae," Swiss Etcher Matthew Merian's Chronological Story of the Bible, Published in 1625, in Germany

No. 199—"The Parable of the Talents."—The lesson of the talents is illustrated by today's picture, the 199th in Matthew Merian's story of the Bible in pictures, engraved in 1625-1630, which The Constitution is reproducing. "For the kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey. Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents. And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two. But he that had received one went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money. After a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them. And so he that had received five talents came and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents: behold, I have gained beside them five talents more. His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. He also that had received two talents came and said, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents: behold, I have gained two other talents beside them. His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. Then he which had received the one talent came and said, Lord, I knew thee that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strewed: And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is thine. His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strewed: Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury. Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath. And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Matthew xxv, 14-30.

No. 200—"The Last Supper."—"Then assembled together the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders of the people, unto the palace of the high priest, who was called Caiaphas, And consulted that they might take Jesus by subtilty, and kill Him." Matthew xxvi, 3-4. "Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests, And said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver Him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver. And from that time he sought opportunity to betray Him." Matthew xxvi, 14-16. Jesus then directed his disciples to prepare the passover, and when evening came, He sat down with the twelve. "And as they did eat, He said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray Me. And they were exceeding sorrowful, and began every one of them to say unto Him, Lord, is it I? And He answered and said, He that dippeth his hand with Me in the dish, the same shall betray Me. The Son of man goeth as it is written of him: but woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! It had been good for that man if he had not been born. Then Judas, which betrayed Him, answered and said, Master, is it I? He said unto him, Thou hast said." Matthew xxvi, 21-25. Christ then blessed and brake the bread and gave the bread and wine to His disciples, an action from which the modern Communion service is derived. The Gospel of John also records the after-supper discourse of Jesus to His disciples, in which He promised them the comfort of the Holy Ghost. "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In My Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto Myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know. Thomas saith unto Him, Lord, we know not whither Thou goest; and how can we know the way? Jesus said unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me." John xiv, 1-6.

SLAM LEAD CONVENTION.

BY ELY CULBERTSON.

World's Champion Player and Greatest Card Analyst.

SHE was playing in her first major tournament, the Eastern Championships, and she was going to make it clear that she knew what's what. Without waiting for an inquiry she informed her next opponents that she and her partner would be playing one-over-one, with an artificial two-club bid and the four-five no-trump convention. Her opponents looked at her in some awe. When asked what they played, they didn't know quite what to answer. Nevertheless, on the first deal they took charge of the bidding and proceeded briskly to seven spades. The lady doubled. All passed and the lady, who sat over declarer, opened a heart. Declarer made his contract. He remarked:

"Well, that was the guess of the opening lead. A club lead would have set me, as we haven't the ace."

"Oh, I know," said the lady, "I have the ace of clubs, but of course I couldn't lead it."

"Why not?"

"I forgot to tell you," said the lady brightly, "that we are also using the slam lead convention."

ACE OF TRUMPS LOSES.

And while we are on the subject of slams, we must mention that at the eastern tournament our friend Commander Winfield Liggett bid and make a grand slam contract in hearts, the opponents holding the ace of trumps.

Unfortunately, the opponents made a revoke which was established, and they had to give up the trick which they later got with the ace of hearts.

DECLARER DIDN'T TAKE A TRICK.

What makes a bridge hand interesting? Some hands appeal to readers because they teach a valuable lesson in correct bidding or play. Others, because they illustrate some difficult play which rarely occurs in actual practice, but which is a source of pleasure purely by virtue of its complexity and intricacy. Still other hands are worth reading about because of some sensational result in scoring—a large set, or a grand slam bid and made while the other side, in a different suit, could also have bid and make a small or grand slam for themselves.

From among millions of dull, uninformative and uneventful bridge hands, I try to choose those which will most appeal to my readers, for one of the reasons given above, or for some other reason. Today I have been ably assisted in making my choice by Hal Sax, of Chicago, who sent me the following commonplace deal which produced an unusual result.

East, dealer.

Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ 10 4 ♡ A Q 10 9 5 2 ◇ A K ♣ Q 7 3
♠ 6 5 2 ♡ K J 8 ◇ Q 5 4 3 2 ♣ 9 4	N W E S	♠ K J 8 ♡ 3 ◇ J 10 9 ♣ A K J 8 6 2
	♠ A Q 9 7 3 ♡ 7 6 4 ◇ 8 7 6 ♣ 10 5

East	South	West	North
1♣	1♠(1)	2◇(2)	3◇(3)
3NT(4)	Pass(5)	Pass(6)	Dbl.(7)
Pass(8)	Pass	Pass

2—An equally light free bid; West should have passed, and bid later.

3—North, if his partner can overcall, wants to insure reaching game.

4—Mr. Sax observed that I would find the bidding "a little overambitious," which was an understatement on Mr. Sax's part.

5—South fears the consequences which may arise from his weak bid.

6—It is too late for West to rescue.

7—Quite a logical double. Incidentally, it asks for a lead in hearts, North's bid suit, in accordance with modern conventional usage.

8—Speaking of this bid, Mr. Sax asks, "How often do you see a man with nerve enough to stand a double at three no-trump with East's holding?"

Never before, is my answer; and when I do see such a man, I hope he is not my partner.

The Play.

Now, the remarkable feature of the play is that East did not take a single trick. Vulnerable, and doubled, he was set nine—fortunately, for him, under the new scoring, in which his loss was only 2,600 points. South dutifully opened a heart, and dummy's jack was captured by North's queen. Then North led the ten of spades, and again the jack fell to the queen. A heart continuation by South established North's entire suit, which he ran down one by one. Then he cashed the ace and king of diamonds, and then he led his last spade and East's king was trapped under South's ace-nine. When South had taken these two cards his two remaining small spades were winners, taking care of the last two tricks. So, in all, North and South won six hearts, five spades and the two top diamonds.

Comment.

Disasters in which the declarer does not take a trick are, fortunately, rare. They are interesting to hear about when they do happen, but I hope, for the good of bridge players everywhere, that there will not be many of them to find their way into this column.

and kisses were showered on the couple. Everywhere were heard exclamations of "mazeltov" and the newlyweds, bashfully smiling, graciously acknowledged tumultuous felicitations.

One temperamental young man rushed to my side with outstretched arms, ready to embrace me and shouted: "Lots of luck and best wishes." I wondered if I really looked so sheepish as to lead him to believe I were the groom? I had no time to protest my innocence, for the crowd moved to the tables with food and we were swept with the human current.

Taking advantage of this opportunity, I found my hat and, without being noticed, slipped out of the house. The night was warm and a tender breeze caressed my face. After the stuffy atmosphere of the crowded room it was sheer delight to breathe the fresh air of a fragrant summer night. The moon, surrounded by a golden oreole, rode high above the town. Light, fleecy clouds drifted in the distant celestial space, hiding the moon for a moment or two, but the moon, playfully evading the unwanted embraces, shone brighter than before.

The exotic scent of magnolias perfumed the velvety darkness and strains of the orchestra grew fainter as I walked home. An inexplicable, but deeply-felt sensation akin to nostalgia gripped my heart and the memory of another wedding, the one I attended many years ago and carried me back to another world.

I was a little boy when my mother took me to a provincial town in southern Russia where we journeyed to witness the wedding of my cousin Nadya. We left St. Petersburg and traveled two days to our destination. With surprising vividness I still remember the banquet hall ablaze with lights, long tables covered with stiffly starched snow white linens, shining family silver, towering fancy cakes, tall vases with fresh flowers, excited ushers in full dress and carnations in their lapels, richly dressed guests and meek waiters with ill fitting frocks and white cotton gloves.

The musicians, a docile looking bunch of fellows with sensitive natures and sad eyes—a heritage of our people—were seated behind a screen. A diminutive leader would stick his head from behind the screen, baton in hand, his eyes searching those of the master of ceremonies who ordered the next "number" by a slight nod of his pomaded head.

Everybody was gay and extremely well-behaved, and the spacious banquet hall was astir with festive activity. My cousin Nadya, and her fiance sat in the elaborately upholstered arm chairs with throne-like high backs. The chairs were on a dais to which led three steps covered by a crimson rug.

I was secretly and hopelessly in love with Zhenia, a high school girl and a younger sister of Nayda. It was a one-sided love affair, if you choose to call it that, for the object of my clandestine admiration and tender devotion never even suspected it. There was just a little shaver of ten summers, while Zhenia was in her late teens.

Throughout the entire evening my admiring eyes followed Zhenia and, had I been older, the silent eloquence of my languid stare doubtless would have attracted attention. As it were, nobody had time to notice my presence, let alone delve into my mental reactions.

Indeed, Zhenia looked adorable in her dark brown serge dress. Brown was the official color of Russian gymnasiums for girls. The natty dress revealed Zhenia's beautifully formed slender body vibrant with youth and innocent charm, and her large hazel eyes shone with that even, calm light that makes attractive all young women irresistibly lovely. Her soft chestnut hair was fashioned into a high coiffure (thirty years ago it was considered the acme of style) and at every turn of her pretty head the light from the crystal chandeliers reflected in her hair, making it appear a fluffy mass of mellow gold.

The graduating high school boys and college students vied with one another for Zhenia's favors and her dance program was filled at the outset of the evening. And I, insignificant, suffering the anguish of unrequited love, crestfallen and forlorn, watched Zhenia's divine figure as she gracefully glided in an enraptured waltz.

Upon my return to St. Petersburg, other interests commanded my attention and—men, too, are fickle—very soon I forgot the glamorous wedding, the provincial town and charming Zhenia.

Much water has flown under the bridge since then, and only recently I received a letter from Zhenia. She had been married and now is a widow with a little girl. The revolution had declassed her and she was in dire circumstances.

Poor Zhenia, I thought to myself compassionately. Fate had been unkind to her and she, together with millions of other Russian women of the old social order, is bearing a heavy cross.

I tried to resurrect in my memory the half forgotten features of Zhenia's lovely face—alas; it was in vain. The intervening years, the change from boyhood to adolescence and to manhood, together with the devitalizing effect of the struggle for existence, have all but completely erased from my memory that which at once time seemed so dear to me.

Smart Black and White Vies With Gay Tints in Day and Evening Modes

LATE Spring finds Dame Fashion in a mood of gaiety and frivolity which expresses itself in an effusion of frocks and gowns more glamorous than they have been for some seasons past.

Evening gowns, cut on daring lines, in the riotous colors of Spring; classic evening wraps which lend an air of extreme sophistication; daytime ensembles in rich materials and featuring bizarre touches, all contribute to the current mode.

Vivid colors hold their seasonal place in the sun, but have a healthy rival in the combinations of black and white. Molyneux, Rochas, Schiaparelli and other world-famous couturieres have outdone themselves this season in the creation of black and white ensembles for early Summer wear.

New fashion notes include skirts with the fullness concentrated at the front; short sleeves of exaggerated size, enhanced by puffs and pleatings; necklines daintily edged with ruchings, pleated collars and similar frou-frous.

Hats present a study in contrasts. It is difficult to say which predominate — the huge picture-hats or the tiny affairs.
